PLANT A VICTORY GARDEN.

The war gardens of 1918 made it easier for America to feed her own people and send staple products to Europe. In North Carolina, the year was a very lean one. The cool spring followed by the drought and parching sun played havoc with those vegetables which were planted. Only those war gardeners who had the patience to replant, or who were fortunately located, had an abundance of things to eat and some to can. In spite of this, however, reports made to Mrs. Jane S. McKimmon of the North Carolina Extension Service show that the women and children were able to fill over 5 1/4 millions of cans from the fruits and vegetables which were grown, besides a large amount which was dried or brined. This shows what gardens will do in food production, even under adverse circumstances.

Following the war gardens of the summer, statistics collected by the county home demonstration agents showed that about 9,000 winter gardens were planted in the state. These have also aided greatly in cutting down the food bill. At the present time finds Mrs. McKimmon, there is no need for a war garden, but there is very great need for a Victory garden.

The United States now has more people than ever to aid in feeding. All food material will probably continue to be high in price for several months. In fact, Mr. Hoover says that the world's food shortage will last for another seven years. For that reason, the extension workers are appealing for a greater garden crop in 1919 than in 1918, and that more canning and drying for winter use be done.

Last year the canning club girls had to leave their gardens and help work in the fields. An example of this was seen in the case of Miss Violet Willoughby, who, though not over 15 years of age, with the help of her widowed mother, ran a farm in Pitt county. She wrote to Mrs. McKimmon that the only reason that she filled only 775 cans from the products of her garden was because the tobacco crop needed so much of her attention. "I believe," she said, "that I could have canned twice as much had I had the time, but I had to do my canning at night, and work the tobacco in the day time." It was such spirit as this over the State which enabled America to plant victory gardens in 1919.

To aid the victory garden movement the Extension Service is reprinting Extension Circular No. 43 which gives suggestions for a year round garden, and copies of this will soon be available to those who make request for them.

THE "FLU."

The following piece of poetry has been going the rounds of late and we think you should read it:

When your back is broke and your eyes are blurred,
And your chin bones knock and your tongue is furled,
And your tonsils squeak and your hair gets dry,
And you're doggone sure you're going to die,
But you're skeered you wont and afraid you will,
Just drag to bed and have your chill,
And pray the Lord to see you through
For you've got the "Flu" boy,
You've got the "Flu."

When your toes curl up and your belt goes flat,
And you're twice as mean as a Thomas cat,
And life is a long and dismal course,
And your food all tastes like a hard boiled harse,
When your lattice aches and your head's a luzz,
And nothing is as it ever was,
Here are my sad regrets to you
For you've got the "Flu" boy,
You've got the "Flu."

What is it like, this Spanish Flu?
Ask me, brother, for I've been through,
It is a misery out of despair;
It pulls your teeth and curls your hair;
It thins your blood and brays your bones,
And fills your chaw with moans and groans,
And sometime, maybe, you'll get well?
Some call it "Flu" boys,
But I call it "Hell!"

LONDON, March 12.—The Spartacides are again menacing Berlin from the southeastern side, said a Berlin dispatch this afternoon. The Reds still hold Lichtenberg station, which is fortified. The central part of Berlin keeps gay with theaters and dance halls full. Martial law has been proclaimed at Grandenz, Thorn and Strasnburg as a result the advance of the Spartacide movement.

THIS HAPPY WOMAN RECOVERERS FROM NERVE STRAIN OF YEARS

How women suffer under nervous strain is not realized by the average man. Women understand this suffering.

The case of Mrs. Ralph McFarland, of 1127 Taylor street, Columbia, S. C., will interest hundreds of women here.

"The least noise would startle me," said Mrs. McFarland. "At night any sound would wake me, and my nerves would fairly quiver. As I lay awake, even the sound of the wind would make me want to jump out of bed. I could not control myself.

"My nerves were jumpy and the least thing would excite me. I was always under a strain that was wearing on my system and I had seen so many women suffer this way that I knew the serious results it would have.

"My nervousness came, in the first place, from stomach trouble, the doctors said, but it seemed to me that it was my nerves that affected my stomach. I had what is called a 'nervous stomach.' Many days nothing that I would eat would agree with me. I would have no appetite and food would lie like a lump in my stomach. Digestion would seem to be paralyzed during these spells. Then I would get sick at my stomach and have terrible headaches. I began to lose strength and weight and my complexion became sallow.

"Nothing seemed to reach my case except, maybe, to give me a little temporary relief. Now I am relieved and happy because I was so much impressed about a new medicine here. I read the statements day after day of well known people who were telling of their experiences with Peplax, the medicine that is composed of Nature remedies designed to meet cases like mine. This medicine is composed of old remedies we know all about, like gentian root, rhubarb root, Jamaica ginger root, dandelion, Spanish licorice, sarsaparilla root and mandrake, the old nerve medicine.

"It is designed to act on the whole system and it certainly relieved me quickly. It seemed to stop my nervous stomach at once and gave me back my natural appetite and good digestion. Not one headache or dizzy spell have I had since I began to take Peplax.

"After the first few nights my nerves began to be quieted and now I sleep restfully. You can imagine the strength I am gaining."

Peplax is now being specially introduced and recommended at the J. H. Kennedy Drug Store. Peplax is recommended by leading druggists everywhere. If your druggist can not supply you, don't wait, address Kennedy Drug Co., Gastonia.
