THIRTIETH DIVISION PARADES AT COLUMBIA

Seven Thousand Men of "Old Hickory" Division Pass in Review as Thousands of Carolinians and Tennesseans Shout and Cheer—Company A, 115th Machine Gun Battalion, Participated.

W. J. Cornack in Charlotte Observer.
 Columbia, S. C., March 31.—Eyes shining with joy of victory, faces sobered by the thought of the carnage through which they had passed and by a realization of the successful termination of the high adventure upon which they embarked nearly 12 months ago, 7,000 virile, stalwart Americans, the peerless sons of the South, paraded through the streets of Columbia this afternoon, marching between banks of massed humanity from which mighty cheers arose. The plaudits of grateful South Carolinians, North Carolinians and Tennesseans and the folk of other states.

It was the initial appearance of the "Fighting Thirtieth" division's infantry, composed principally of men from North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee, with a sprinkling of soldiers from western states, but Americans all, welded into blood brotherhood by the fires of battle and the trials and vicissitudes undergone by these greatest of modern warriors. The parade and subsequent entertainment and celebration were unparalleled in the history of this city, in the character of the event and the size of the crowd, which has been variously estimated at from 100,000 to 125,000 people.

The emotions of the crowd were varied. Right after their of cheers swelled upwards as the men of the Thirtieth marched in close formation, platoon front, headed by their brigade commander, Brig. Gen. L. D. Tyson, of Knoxville, Tenn., and his staff. Occasionally a sob could be heard from a blank veiled figure, an expression of sorrow for one who now lies under the soil of France or in Flanders fields. Democracy's and a nation's contribution to humanity and freedom. The faces of parents whose sons were in the parade radiated with joy, pride and relief that they had escaped the supreme sacrifice, while others, their hearts undetected in the sameness of the khaki-clad lines, gazed tensely in suspense, with heart hunger in their eyes. Winsome matrons, with infants in their arms, looked at husbands perhaps to estimate the fat and baby-boned men, and aged women, their hair whitened by years and faces smoothed from hardships, looked up on the martial spectacle and their hearts, with its morbidness heaving, seemed almost to break in to them.

Victorians of the war, as even the soldiers, thinking of the battles all the south that they fought through four long years, became more erect and more soldierly bearing and would gladly have marched with the warriors of this generation.

Along the route, the 50th brigade was allowed to parade without their rifles, equipment and arms, which, although of great and high possession value, are to be returned to the government at the close of the war.

The parade was participated in by the 117th infantry, formerly the Third Tennessee national guard regiment, under command of Col. C. E. S. Pender, of Knoxville, Tenn., the 118th infantry, the old First South Carolina national guard regiment, under command of Col. P. K. McCully, of Anderson, S. C.; the 115th field artillery, before its federalization the First national guard regiment of Tennessee, under command of Col. Harry Berry, of Nashville, Tenn.; the 115th machine gun battalion, under command of Major Pearce, of North Carolina, and 10th ammunition train, formerly the Second regiment of the South Carolina national guard, under command of Capt. Harry O. Witherington, of Charleston, S. C., senior officer of the train.

The parade was reviewed by Governor Robert A. Cooper, of South Carolina; Brigadier General W. E. Cole, commander of Camp Jackson, and Brigadier General Tyson, commander of the 50th brigade. On the reviewing stand was a coterie of distinguished men, including Senators E. D. Smith and N. B. Dial, of South Carolina, several congressmen and a number of army officers.

The parade was halted so General Tyson could pin the distinguished service cross on the breast of Corporal George Wells Batson, of Greenville, S. C., a member of Company A, 118th infantry. The festivities were concluded tonight by a series of dances given to the officers and men in every part of the town.

HOST OF FANS WILL SEE BIG LEAGUE GAME

The occasion of the visit to this city of the Boston Braves and the Detroit Tigers on Thursday afternoon April 10th is to be made a gala day by the thousands of baseball fans of this place and of the surrounding towns. These devoted in the wood outposts have to be content, for the greater part of the time, to follow the work of the stars of the diamond through the newspapers but here at Gastonia they will have the opportunity of seeing in the flesh some of the biggest stars of the game, the men who are receiving salaries that run into five figures annually and whose names are known wherever baseball is played.

In many places where the Boston and Detroit clubs are to play on the way North from their training camp in Georgia a half holiday has been declared so that everybody who wants can be gathered along the rail lines when the game is started. It is not unlikely that something of this sort will be done here, so great has been the general interest in the game. It has always been the case that the fans outside of the city, and even the smallest would have its days of baseball "madness" turned out for these exhibition games as well as they do in the home town on the game. Otherwise it would have been impossible for the Braves to have had some of the offered games that have greeted them in their exhibition games in other cities. At Durham, Ala., over 2,000 fans came out for the game, there were 2,200 at Columbia, S. C., over 2,500 at Macon, Ga., and many more at Ocala, Fla., all smaller places than this place.

There's a rich, satisfying, old-time flavor to
 that no substitute can ever equal.
 A healthful drink that leaves no trace of harm, a beverage grateful to the stomach, that never upsets nerves, heart or digestion as does sometimes coffee.
Boil just like coffee
 Boil thoroughly (15 minutes after boiling begins) make it rich and dark and you have something that makes your meal doubly enjoyable.
