He lantic states to shape their policies with a vision of the future while the condutions were in this plastic state.

Destaring that North Carolina has had no volume of export business in the past. Mr. McRae predicted that the opening up of the four South Atlantic states will. result in the inauguration of industrials which otherwise will be prevented from enjoying a satisfactory business by the nature of existing conditions. "The country back of the ports must develop to make use of the imported materials. and this section has the facilities or easily may provide such facilities, " said he.

nancial resources and kindred deficiences. However, the strongholds of the great eastern ports on rail and water rates and on each class of rates, has been broken and the south is now offered the wonderful opportunity of securing, through concerted action, the rates that have been fought for during a long period of years.

"The south is getting away and must continue to get away from the one crop idea. Every section to prosper must have an objective but no section can exist on one idea. There must be varied industries to insure normal growth.

"Creation of wealth is the most vital consideration. When a section has abundance, each individual is combled to participate in the benefits, and also each individual should participate in the creation of that wealth.

"America is to take a leading part in the world's commerce. This nation made no concerted effort to attain such a position. It was theast upon her. Much adjustment remains to be worked out, but the possibilities are not obscured. To do her part, North Carolina must act now.

"In the plan of organizing the South Atlantic Export Company, a quasi-public consoration composed of a league of cit ies in four states, each city will be a friendly rival of the other but also they are joined together to get the full benefits and rights of their position, on equality with the eastern interior cities and ports...

The South Atlantic Export Company will be organized with an authorized capiital of $4,000,000 and an immediate capital of $2,000,000. Mr. McRae said, however, that Matthew Hale, who originally proposed this organization, says business may be undertaken with a paid in capital of $400,000, with $1000,000 allotted to each of the four states. Each state's part distributed among the various cities will mean only a nominal part of the capital will be absorbed by each.

In closing Mr. McRae appealed to the Gastonia business men to co-operate with the southern manufacturers in order to prevent further "exploitation of this section by other sections. Don't manufacture your products to be exploited by others, secure that profit for yourselves."

With Mr. McRae was a delegation of Charlotte men composed of Messrs. Clarence O. Kuester, Word H. Wood and S. B. Tanner, Jr. Mr. Wood spoke briefly of the work Mr. McRae was doing without pay or hope thereof in promoting the South Atlantic Export Company.
