Carrying Religion Too Far

Early this month Hindus from all parts of the world converged on a small strip of land at the confluence of the Ganges and Kumma rivers. The idea, a belief of the Hindu religion, is that bathing in the river spares bathers the pangs of re-birth into a reincarnation.

With all this we have no argument. Different peoples, in different areas of the world, have long had different religions and no one can say that his religion holds all the anwers and that the other man's religion is all wet. In fact, this very tendency of the religious fanatics and narrow-minded, is the cause of many wars and much suffering throughout the history of the world.

On the other hand, the results of the massing on the Ganges in India was the most tragic and cost the lives of perhaps 1,000 Hindus. The worst part of it is that any of the Hindus perhaps risked death, believing that death at this time was almost equivalent to a direct passage to Heaven.

Therefore, when the exact hour that the astrologers had said would be the perfect time to bathe arrived masses of the Hindus suddenly began moving in bodies to the river bank. Shortly before a procession of religious officials and other higher-ups had proceeded the bank of the river on elephant.

As the mob gathered momentum and lost control, they met the column of elephants and officials returning, and soon a melee developed which left in its wake, a carnage. The onsurge of the crowds pushed helpless thousands into the water and drowned them. After the scramble was over, fatalites were estimated at a thousand. Another thousand were injured.

Such stampedes and death have occurred often at religious observances. While it may be a tribute to the faith of some of those who died, many of them undoubtedly died unwillingly, and one cannot imagine a more useless sacrifice from either the human or heavenly concept.

The U. N. And Security

Sometimes one wonders whether it is much of an advantage having the United Nations located in this country. The latest question raising doubts on this score is the securi-ty check policies being used and not used morial hospital where she was a against U. N. employers.

Congress, some committees, and even private organizations, have charged that U. N. employes were not properly screened before being hired. Since New York City seems to be the roosting place for many American Communists, it is natural to assume that the Reds Sunday. make every effort to get their followers U. N. jobs.

Not long ago it was charged by a congressional committee that many Americans working for the U. N. were of questionable standing so far as security matters were concerned. Finally a system was set up whereby these Americans were to be screened before being hired.

That process is now being followed. The catch is that for eign nationals are not so screened. Thus foreign nationals doing the same thing as Americans are not checked on security, while the Americans are-and the security, while the Americans are—and the checking takes time—time which meanwhile were Sunday visitors with Mrs. checking takes time—time which meanwhile west's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Sutton. puts someone else in the open job.

The Secretary General, Dag Hammarskjold, is generally in charge of employment. The United States doesn't have control over employment policies directly, only exercising of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Best near visa control, but this is a vague and loose arrangement, whereby American citizens must daughter Debbie of Washington spent Sunday with relatives here. submit to security checks (which they should) and foreign nationals need not. It is an unsatisfactory situation, about which nothing can be done.
