Battle On Car Sales

Ford and General Motors seem to be headed for a showdown battle over the best-selling automobile in the United States and the crucial round in the struggle will come in 1955.

General Motors is guarding its plans for the 1955 Chevrolet-with which it hopes to regain the sales lead-carefully. The company was so shocked when the Wall Street Journal recently revealed some of the 1955 changes that it withdrew its large advertising account from the paper.

Not only are General Motors and Ford girding for a sales battle in 1955, but Chrysler hopes to change the Plymouth enough to put it once again into a really competitive sales position.

Sales of new cars this year are not expected to top 5,000,000-which is still near the all-time record-but next year the competition will be even keener and sales probably higher and all of the major producers of the lowest priced best sellers will be offering the public important innovations.

It doesn't look as if prices will come down at the moment, but it appears certain the steel pay increase won't push prices up either. The biggest change is likely to appear in the cars themselves-the 1955 models-and not in reached such proportions that Hitler was forced to disperse his industry into numerous small-town plants. It was common practice for parts to be built in a number of plants, in the country or small towns, and fabricated at another small-town or even under-ground plants.

U. S. industry, however, is not dispersed. little of it has been placed under-ground, and our major industrial cities continue to be prime targets for a potential aerial aggressor. There have been disturbing reports in the last year that certain critical defense items are being concentrated (in production) in one or two key plants.

This is the exact mistake made by Germany in the early years of World War II, and it is the reason the Germans found themselves so short of fuel in 1944 and 1945.

Oddly enough, the United States appears destined to continue along its way with private business handling practically all our defense work, concentrated in the key industrial centers, and extremely vulnerable to enemy air attack. Such a situation comes close to inviting disaster, and when the disaster occurs, there will be anguished cries about miscalculations and a lack of foresight from the citizenry. Then, however, it will be too late-as is too often the case with democracies concerning preparations for war.

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

Happenings That Affect the Future of Every Individual Nation and International Problems Inseparable From Local Welfare.

You can't get something for nothing, even from the Federal government. And the reliance of the states on Federal funds is a debilitating element in our national life.

Those are, in essence, the major points made in a study of "Federal Grant-in-Aid Programs" which was recently published by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

It is significant that leaders of both parties strongly feel that a reassessment of Federal-State relationships is in order. In urging the creation of a commission to deal with the matter, President Eisenhower observed: "The present division of activities between Federal and State governments, including their local subdivisions, is the product of more than a century and a half of piecemeal and tells himself that there is no such often haphazard growth. This growth in recent decades has proceeded at a speed defying order and efficiency. Now there is need to review and assess, with prudence and foresight, the proper roles of the Federal, State and local governments." Governor Stevenson, in a 1952 campaign speech, stated that the Federal government "should be unencumbered in the discharge of its monstrous major duties by a lot of other jobs it need not do, and the states are the dikes which we build more strongly against the flood waters sweeping toward the District of Columbia." The Chamber's study says: "The present tasks of the Congress in the sphere of national defense and foreign relations are crushing. Congress must be freed from time-consuming con-be performed by states and local communities." The trend toward reliance on the central gov ernment has been enormously accelerated in a rel atively short period of time. In the 20's, Federal grants to the states were confined to about 10 functions and amounted to only $100.000,000 a year, of which 75 per cent was earmarked for highways Last year these grants came to $2,600,000,000 and covered 40 programs. The fields of health, education and welfare, all historically local responsibilities, accounted for 75 per cent of the money.

FEAR

We have said that fear is also a friend and life saver, while chronic fear and anxiety is such a deadly enemy to man how can it be his friend?

The sales standings of a generation have been changed-by Buick. For Buick today is outselling all other cars in America-regardless of price price or sales total.

The 1955 models are expected to hit the market in December or January, or perhaps a bit earlier this year. Besides, Ford, Chevrolet and Plymouth, major changes are expected in most of the Chrysler cars: Pontiac, Packard and other Ford company automobiles are . among those expected to offer major changes.

U. S. Industry Vulnerable

United States Chamber of Commerce President Clem B. Johnston, speaking before 250 industrial leaders recently, said that an enemy air attack on the United States would aim first at wrecking the nation's industrial power. This is not a new observation.

In this regard, however, it is a little surprising that the United States has failed to appreciate the lesson of World War II. The combined British-American aerial onslought against Germany in 1943, 1944 and 1945

Along with this has come a drastic change in the tax situation. Prior to 1913, there was little tax duplication between the federal government and the states. Now duplication is the rule rather than the exception-as witness personal income taxes. Corporate income taxes, estate and gasoline taxes. and so on. And, to quote the Chambers' study again, the federal grants, rather than being gifts, are in reality "a partial return of money taken from the states and their peoples by the Washington tax gatherers."

Just what activities should again be regarded as purely state and local functions is a matter in which there are vast divergences of opinion. But it is obvious that very important changes must be made if anything even resembling the old separation of powers philosophy which the founding fathers viewed as the cornerstone of our liberties is to be regained. We will have to work on the principle that nothing which is possible to accomplish on the state and local levels can be delegated to another authority. And that, if it happens, will be sweeping adjustment indeed.
