

Mid-Term School Graduates Can Finish Army Training By Fall and Enter College

WASHINGTON—Young men who will graduate from high school at mid-term early in 1956 can complete their six-months' active duty obligation under the Reserve Forces act in time to enter college this fall, according to the Department of the Army.

Volunteers under the new program who report for training in January will be finished in July—well in advance of college and university opening dates and in time to have a pre-school summer vacation.

"The same rule of thumb applies to mid-term graduates who will enter the labor market and consider early fall a more advantageous season to job-hunt.

To be eligible for training under the new Reserve Forces Act, a young man must be between 17 and 17 and a half years of age. After completing active duty, he will have a seven and a half year obligation in the Ready Reserve. So long as he keeps up this obligation, he will be exempt for the two-year active duty training required by the Universal Military Training and Service Act.

Young men who come on duty through the Army Reserve for the six-months' training will spend eight weeks in basic training at an installation as near as practical to their own home areas. Advance training will occupy their remaining time on duty. Where this will depend upon their branch assignments.

Advance training will be given in the three combat arms—infantry, artillery and armor—and in such technical services as the Medical Corps, the Corps of Engineers, Signal Corps, Transportation Corps, Ordnance and Quartermaster Corps.

National Guardsmen in this age group are eligible also for the shortened period of active duty training.

Flu Causes Weight Loss Among Hogs

Hog raisers are in for serious trouble when flu invades the swine herd, the American Foundation for Animal Health warned farmers today.

"Fall pigs may be very susceptible to swine influenza because of the chilly, changeable weather at this time of year," the Foundation said. "Adequate housing, good bedding, and proper ventilation should be provided and other preventive steps taken to avoid losses."

Swine influenza is not a major swine killer, but it takes a tremendous economic toll because it causes poor feed efficiency, losses in weight, and lowered fertility.

The Foundation suggested that farmers practice the following precautions to keep swine flu from their herds during the winter months ahead:

1. Provide well-bedded, well-ventilated and draft-free quarters. Overcrowding and night piling should be avoided.
2. Watch for warning signs of influenza, such as listlessness, coughing, watery eyes, loss of appetite and difficult breathing.
3. Isolate newly-purchased pigs for at least two weeks before allowing them in the home herd.
4. In the event of symptoms, have the trouble diagnosed immediately so proper nursing and treatment can be started. Steps should also be taken to prevent complicating diseases from striking, the Foundation reported.

Lespedeza Seed Is More Abundant

With larger prospective crops this year than last in all 15 producing states, the 1955 production of lespedeza seed is forecast at 181,420,000 pounds of clean seed.

This would be the largest crop since 1949, according to the N. C. Department of Agriculture, and more than twice last year's small production of 84,830,000 pounds and 10 per cent larger than the 1944-54 average of 164,340,000 pounds. Largest increases over last year's production are indicated for South Carolina and Georgia.

The production indicated for North Carolina is 33,250 pounds, compared to 16,380 last year.

SAVES CHILDREN, DROWNS

Fort Lauderdale, Fla. — Mrs. Hazel Wolin, 33, drowned, but saved her children by holding their heads above water when they were trapped in a car that overturned in a canal. Mrs. Wolin and the children, Irene 6, and Roy, 3, were trapped in the upside down car about fifteen minutes while her husband, Martin, got out through a window and tried to rescue them. When the bottom of the car was tipped over and the children removed, Mrs. Wolin had already drowned.

Carver Class Asks Aid for Large Family

The economics class at Carver High school recommends financial aid for large families so children may remain in school.

The students adopted such a resolution and forwarded it to the U. S. Senator from North Carolina, Representative Graham Barden, and newspapers after reading and discussing an article, "Many Americans Are Still Chronically Poor Despite General Prosperity." The article appeared in the Greensboro Daily News October 30.

Robert Korneyag, chairman of the class, said it was found that in the South, low income families are larger and about one-sixth of low income families are farm operators. The non-white population makes up a large portion of the low income group, Korneyag said, and added, that it was pointed out that the formal education of the people in the rural areas is lower than those in the urban areas.

Korneyag said, "We believe that any permanent solution to the problem must concern itself with raising the educational level of members of the low income families. If this is to be done, we believe that some financial aid must be made available to these families so children do not have to remain out of school in order to supplement the family's income."

He said that it was the general belief of the class that financial aid should be received only on condition that the children remain in school. This could be handled similar to the methods used by the Veterans Administration with regards to veterans' training under the G.I. Bill of Rights.

Secondly, the group recommended an adult education program, stressing family life education. Korneyag said the class believes that this program should be undertaken by the federal government and that it ultimately should reduce the size of the family in the low income group.
