C. E. McIntosh Says Youth Survey In North Carolina Shows Need of More Vocational Training In School System.

Speaking to the monthly meeting of the Hoke county white school teachers in the high school building Tuesday night, C. E. McIntosh, Chapel Hill professor, declared that what the school system of North Carolina needs most of all is a course of study whereby the students may learn to use their hands as well as their

Mr. McIntosh declared that we are at present trying to teach the children something in which the larger part have no interest whatsoever and expressed his belief that only by adding vocational courses in which the child is taught to do something with his hands can interest be maintained and pupils be kept from quitting school at early ages.

The speaker presented interesting figures showing that only 18.4 per cent of the children in North Carolina who enter the first grade are ever graduated from high school.

"Is the trouble with the boy or girl," he asked, "or with what we attack on a convoy of British vessels are trying to teach them? Are we about 400 miles west of Ireland last going to try to force the children of everybody through what we call the cultural type of training?"

Mr. McIntosh pointed out that the schools literally tell the pupil what must be studied and gives him little choice in the matter.

"If a person wants those cultural courses," he declared, "it's all right to go ahead and get it-but most people don't want it."

Advantage of actual experience over "book learning" was illustrated with a description of the way arithmetic is taught at the Penderlea school in Pender county. "The children learn there," he said, "by actual figuring with produce prices. Isn't that better than having to aid to B and what B said to C?" The speaker also added as one of the evils with which the North Carolina school system has to contend the loading down of grammar school teachers with large classes because the higher classes have fewer pupils and the teacher average has to be maintained.
