Survey Shows More Cotton Being Used

A survey of the fashion market in New York which the Cotton-Textile Institute is conducting, reveals, in its preliminary stage, that more cotton models are being shown this year than ever before. This fact is directly traceable, the Institute believes, to increased acceptance of cotton by high-style designers.

Cotton garments run the gamut of sports, daytime, and evening wear. Charles Armour, one of the better-dress manufacturers, is showing about 90% cottons, because "these fabrics are true to the spirit of summer, and suited to most of our climates," Mr. Armour said. Emphasis here is on jewel-tone iridescent chambrays, Glen Plaid tweed cottons, plaid gingham, and cotton lace. Only washable, color-fast fabrics are used. This manufacturer believes that the dress suit is rapidly taking the place of the dress alone and has made the former the theme of his collection. This smart line of tailored cotton dress suits is designed for town, for country, for suburban wear, and for travel.

Cotton formals are being widely promoted, with many of the higher-priced evening lines for summer averaging as high as 80 per cent cotton. The head of one important house stated that he had made a study of the South, which is a tremendous market for formal wear, and had discovered a very strong demand for cotton gowns.

The market reveals many old-time fabrics, such as voile, dimity, dotted Swiss, batiste, and muslin which are particularly adapted to the soft slim silhouette. Chambray, seersucker, denim, ticking, oxford, and sailcloth lead the sportswear parade; and calico and unbleached musline are used in the new broomstick skirts. Pique is seen in everything from sportswear to formal evening clothes. And organdie—plain, embroidered, shadow and cloque—appears in the loveliest evening gowns of many a year.

ELECTRICITY

The construction of new power lines will provide electricity in six new communities of Cherokee county, reports A. Q. Ketter, farm agent of the N. C. State College Extension Service.

Exquisite American-made replicas of fine foreign laces are found in the higher-priced cotton evening gowns, and interesting fabric-like types in daytime wear. American manufacturers have done an outstanding job of reproducing the better foreign laces, with the result that the new cotton laces are one of the highlights of the fashion market.

OF course he does! Uncle Natchel has learned by experience it pays to work with Nature.
Chilean Nitrate is natural—the only natural nitrate in the world. It's good for all your crops. Its quick-acting nitrogen and natural balance of "vitamin" plant food elements help you make larger crops and higher quality, too.
In mixed fertilizer and as side dressing use Natural Chilean Nitrate. Use it regularly, year after year, to get full benefit of its natural fertilizing and soil-improving qualities.

A TAR HEEL IN NEW YORK

By BOB COVINGTON

MONDAY. Back to work after a beautiful Easter Sunday, and the sun was kind enough to help the back to work movement by shining again—even though the job he had done on Easter Sunday was good enough to let him loaf for a while. In the evening talking with some friends in front of whose windows there had occurred a tragic traffic accident. Amazed to hear them say that it seemed hours before an ambulance appeared to take care of the victims. New York is usually as efficient at those things. I remember one time we saw a car afire down a couple of blocks and before we could get there, eleven fire engines had arrived.

TUESDAY. An evening at home reading "Kabloona" a fascinating book about life among the Eskimos of extreme northern Canada. Life in an igloo sounds like something to read about rather than live. A house of ice five feet in diameter—temperature down to 55 degrees below zero. If you're hungry take the axe and cut off a hunk of frozen seal. Apparently the only thing the Eskimos take hot is tea, of which they drink gallons every day. Most amazing fact, to me, in the book is that an Eskimo driving his sled-team of dogs across the limitless snow of the arctic plains makes them turn to the right or left with the familiar words, "gee" and "haw."

WEDNESDAY. Some boys across the street have introduced us to a new game—and a new way to get exercise in New York. It's called paddle ball and is played by hitting a 5c rubber ball up against a wall with a wooden paddle, much like one-court tennis. Down by the East River, a couple of blocks behind our apartment is a public playground with plenty of walls for this and other games. It seems queer to be playing a game with river boats passing within a few yards and the huge slaughter houses at your back filling the air with a warm, meaty smell. At five-thirty most of the city children who use the playground in the daytime have gone, although a few tussle and scream on a nearby concrete basketball court which must keep their parents busy having shoes half-soled.

THURSDAY. Discussing with other Davidson men the problems of an alumni meeting scheduled in a week or so. It's surprising to find how many alumni of one small southern college can collect in and around New York. Davidson numbers over 250 alumni in the New York area. Many who were good friends in college never see each other from one annual dinner to the next. Biggest group among the alumni in New York seems to be the doctors. Have known of four or five taking an internship in the city at one time. Some settle down right in New York and start practice. The interesting fact is that they often seem to get started on their career more quickly this way than in a smaller place where they are known. One way the practice starts, I believe, is that the young doctor takes an office in an apartment building. Someone in the building gets sick, doesn't know a doctor in the whole city, asks the apartment house doorman for a doctor, and the doctor-in-the-building gets the call.

FRIDAY. A friend introduced me to a Virginia girl who is a ballet dancer. Interested in her stories of the ballet at the Ford Building at the World's Fair last year. They danced six shows a day, only stopping for a box lunch in the dressing room. She had one day off each week. Now between engagements she studies and practices all day, six days a week. I had always thought that a person like her would think and talk of just one thing—her work, but she talked about it only when we quizzed her. Seemed more interested in talking about a device used in New York hotels, whereby a clerk at the desk writes a message and a pencil in the garage downstairs writes the same message for the garage man.

SATURDAY. The good old sun made it a week by shining again. The leaves on the trees in the park popped out over night, or so it seemed to me. Played tennis with three of the boys from the office and as soon as they had a sandwich they took the train for the suburbs where they were planning to play softball. Trying to crowd a week's exercise into one day... a New York habit.
