More Farm Timber Must Go To War

Smokeless powder, blood plasma containers, cargo parachutes, aviator vests, shell casings, first-aid kits, and commando bags are just a few of the many hundreds of things for which pulpwood is needed in the prosecution of the war.

Timber and pulpwood needs far outstrip the supply and R. W. Graeber Extension forester at State College, appeals to North Carolina farmers to do everything possible to help supply the wood products needed to meet military and essential civilian requirements.

He warns that unless farmers do more in supplying timber products there may be a serious shortage of containers, packaging, and wrappings for farm crops.

"Lumber and pulpwood production can be increased without stripping our woodlands. Selective cutting will assure greater returns for less time and labor, and will improve the stands for future timber crops," Graeber says.

Farmers may obtain help in marketing, cutting, and marketing their timber by applying to the county agents, the Extension farm foresters, the Timber Production War Project foresters, and the U. S. Forest Service. All of these agencies stand ready to assist farmers in determining the mature trees to be taken from the stands for lumber, thinning for pulpwood, and approved methods of forest management.

"The armed forces are now demanding tremendous quantities of both timber and pulpwood, especially to meet invasion needs, and farmers can make no greater contribution to the war effort than by helping to supply forest products," Graeber says.

PLANT LICE

Use nicotine spray or dust in the control of aphids, or plant lice, is the recommendation of J. M. Maxwell, at State College.
