In the interest of returning veterans and others who contemplate building homes in the near future, the News-Journal presents a post-war series of All American Homes.

This week, we have selected THE TAFT. The quiet dignity and hospitable charm of Colonial architecture are embodied in this home for well planned building and comfortable living.

Garden Tour

Some of the girls in our party made pictures of the old rice mill and other outstanding spots. After our visit here, we went back to Charleston and over the Cooper River bridge. This bridge is two miles long and was the highest bridge in the United States before the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco was built. Passing over the bridge was the only part of the trip I must admit I did not exactly enjoy - especially since the first cars were just allowed to go across the bridge about 2 hours earlier. The bridge had been damaged a few weeks before when a ship broke anchor during a storm. You can imagine the noise a bus load of women can make all talking at once. There was very little conversation however, while we were going over the bridge. We had dinner in Georgetown and visited Brookgreen garden near Myrtle Beach on our way home. The garden was formerly owned by Mr. and Mrs. Huntington, who, several years ago, gave the property to the state of South Carolina. We hope Mrs. McLaurin's plants grow. They should. She didn't thank anyone for them. The next tour we make we would like to suggest taking along a secretary. Some of our group who carry on such a heavy correspondence sometimes delay the bus. We had a wonderful trip. A grand group of folks made the tour and when another club tour is announced I'm sure all the women who went to Charleston will want to go along. Home Notes

Refrigerator molds for salads and deserts have been so designed that they take up less room than a quart of milk. The answer is that they are placed in an upright rack. This new household utensil, which includes six aluminum molds and the rack, is expected to retail at $1.

Canned goat milk is now available. It is whole milk, not condensed and not evaporated. The flavor is slightly different from the fresh, but pleasant drinking all the same. It is considered a blessing for those on diets demanding this milk so difficult to buy fresh.

Sleeping bags, mittens, hunting jackets and other cold weather, out-door clothing may soon be interlined with downlike, superfine glass fibers similar to those used during the war for sound and heat insulation in B-29's.

Because the glassfibers are in-organic, and contain no protein substance that can cause an allergy such as asthma, experiments are being made to use the fibers in pillows and mattresses. Bedding dust resulting from the disintegration of the organic materials usually used, is considered the principal cause of distress to more than one million asthma victims.

Food mixers designed with an eye to compactness are only eight inches high, have built-in power units with twelve speeds and with beaters of the double action type. The mixing bowls are of stainless steel. The same manufacturer is introducing a non-electric vacuum sweeper which draws power from a wheel contacting the floor. It weighs only 7½ pounds.

Old plaster need not be removed. A new material just invented can be applied over old; cracked and chipped wall saving time, expense in knocking down the old plaster is used. It can also be used over rough plaster to make a smooth finish. It claimed to seal all openings around windows and doors as well as cracks and crevices.

Misses Doris and Mary Kathryn Prevatte were weekend guests of Miss Lou McCormick of Sanford this week end.

Americans had a life expectancy at birth of only 35 years in 1800, of 39 years in 1850, of 49 years in 1900; while today it is 55 years.
