On Joining the Farm Bureau

A farmer has a perfect right not to belong to the Farm Bureau if that is his desire. He should, however, think over the financial benefits all farmers have received from the efforts of the Farm Bureau and then ask himself if he is not taking advantage of his neighbors who belong to the Farm Bureau. It appears that he may be doing this by accepting benefits which their Farm Bureau memberships helped pay for when he contributes nothing himself.

The Farm Bureau is, as we see it, primarily a lobby outfit, and in these days when every other organized business or labor group in the country is represented in Washington it is highly important that the farmers have their representatives there also, defensively if for no other reason.

Existence of the Tobacco Stabilization Corporation, offspring of the Farm Bureau, should be sufficient by itself to get every farmer in this county to pay his $3.00 and join the Farm Bureau. In its maintenance of a good price for tobacco, at no cost to the government, it returns much more than the $3.00 to every tobacco farmer every time he sells.

We don't see how a farmer can conscientiously not be a member of the Farm Bureau—unless he objects to it in principle, and that objection would certainly appear to be unrealistic. The Farm Bureau membership drive runs until the end of November.

We Need To Spend This $125,000

We think that the approval of the bond issues for the improvements of the water and sewage systems and the streets in the town of Raeford is vital to the town's future. We think that each of the projects is important and that they should be approved even if a higher tax rate will be necessary, which the mayor doesn't think will be the case.

Citizens of the town should realize the fact that Raeford does not compare favorably on any of these points with other towns in this section of the state of comparable size and that the town must have these improved facilities. Realize also that they are not luxuries but necessities. Property owners of the town who do not have water and sewage facilities are entitled to them just as much as those who do. Fire insurance rates on all the property in the town is another consideration in favor of the added water facilities, not to mention the possible loss by any of us of our home or store by fire due to lack of water.

Consider these questions and register and vote for the bond issues.
