Check Farm Shop Says County Agent

The safety and usefulness of a farm workshop depend upon the condition and arrangement of the shop and its equipment, says the County Agent for the State College Extension Service. He points out that now is a good time for farmers to put their shops in order and do any remodeling or rearranging which may be needed.

The well-equipped farm shop, says the county agent, will serve as the center of activity for a great variety of farm repair and construction jobs. Auto and tractor repairing can be performed more readily in a well-equipped shop. With the present extensive use of machinery, farm workshops should be arranged and equipped to systematically overhaul, repair, and possibly repaint many of the farm machines during the winter. Not only will such machines last longer, but many days of lost time during the following summer can be avoided. If the shop is properly designed for orderliness, good light, comfort and convenience, the work is certain to be easier, safer and more efficient. The National Safety Council suggests the following check-list as a guide in the arrangement and maintenance of the farm workshop:

- Weatherproof the shop and equip it with a heating stove.
- Reserve one side of the shop for repairing large machinery, and install large garage-type doors directly in line with this area.
- The shop should contain large windows to admit as much light as possible.
- A concrete floor is recommended.
- Paint the interior a light color or whitewash it to improve visibility.
- There should be work benches along the walls with drawers under them.
- Have a definite storage space for tools and supplies. Keep everything in its place.
- Some or all of the following equipment properly arranged will increase the efficiency of the shop: forge, grinder, drill press, lathe, chain hoist, air compressor, welder, clamps, tool toter.
