"HOT STICKS" REVOLUTIONIZE HIGH TENSION WORK

Linemen now can work on lethal 132,000-volt conductors through the use of ingenious tools called hot sticks. Upper left shows the two linemen of Carolina Power and Light Company disconnecting the "hot line" from an insulator. Notice how the line has been held safely away from the working men by two "hot sticks" lashed to a pole. If a man were to get within 18 inches of the high voltage line, an arc might leap to him from the conductor.

Upper right shows work nearing completion. Problem was to replace the 30-foot cross-arm with a new timber. The insulator have been lowered to the ground, the three high tension wires have been safely lashed out of the way, and the new cross-arm is being raised into position. It was hoisted in a perpendicular position, and here is being swung across to the adjoining pole.

Center shows some of the many sticks employed in the new method of handling hot lines. Dozens of different kinds of working "heads" are used and the men handle them with amazing adroitness.

Lower left is Roy Anderson, quiet-spoken veteran of hot line work, who is training over 300 CP&L men in the use of the new tools—a job which will take well over a year. Each crew gets two intensive weeks of training on the job.

Lower right is Fred N. Williams, foreman of the Roxboro, N. C. crew, holding a grasping hot stick. Caught over a high tension wire, the clamps may be tightened like a fist by turning the other end of the stick. The stick itself is made of specially treated wood and it is guaranteed to take up to 75,000 volts per foot—in other words, its insulation value four feet away from the hot line would be 300,000 volts. However, as an additional safety factor, twelve-foot sticks would be used to work on a 300,000 volt line.

Darden Faison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kilby Faison of Faison, and Alfred Guion Eubanks of Washington, D. C. son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Lewis Eubanks of McCain, N. C. The Rev. Dennis Kinlaw officiated at the double ring ceremony assisted by the Rev. J. Murphy Smith. The vows were spoken before an arrangement of palms, Oregon fern, white glads and chrysanthemums flanked by numerous seven branched candelabra holding cathedral tapers.

As guests assembled, Graham Newton at the piano, rendered the following selections "Morning" by Grieg, Claire de Lune by Debussy, "Indian Love Call" by Rudolph Friml, "Venetian Love Song" by Nevin, and "Intermetzzo" from the Opera Cavalliera Rusticana.

Miss Anne Stroud sang two selections "I Love You Truly" and "Because", and "The Lord's Prayer" as the benediction.

The bride entered on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage. She wore a gown of bridal satin styled with an inserted yoke of imported, rose point lace outlined with a ruffle of the same, extending down the deep V in the back of the bodice. The fitted bodice tapered to a self-corded basque waist, buttoned down the front with tiny self-covered buttons. Her long fitted sleeves ended in Calla lily points over the hands, and the lace applied full skirt, worn over a hoop fell in a Cathedral train. The bride's fingertip veil of imported French illusion fell from a satin tiara embroidered with seed pearls. She carried a crescent shape bouquet of bride's roses and stephanotis centered with a white orchid and showered with white satin ribbon.

Attending the bride was her sister, Miss Mildred Faison. Her gown of mauve satin was styled with close fitting jacket and full skirt worn over hoops. Her head-dress was a braided bandeau of matching material. She carried a crescent bouquet of baby bronze chrysanthemums.

Mrs. Lamb Casey of Clinton, aunt of the bride and Miss Christine James wore antique gold satin and Miss Mary Burch of Washington, D. C. and Miss Doris Hughes of Mount Olive wore sea-green satin. The bridesmaids dresses were identical in style to the maid of honor. They wore matching bandeaux and carried crescent shaped bouquets of bronze chrysanthemums.

Little Nan Casey of Clinton, cousin of the bride was flower girl and wore dusty rose taffeta made with basque waist and full skirt, worn over hoops. It featured a ruffle neckline and tiny puff sleeves and ruffle hemline. Her head-dress was a copy of the other attendants.

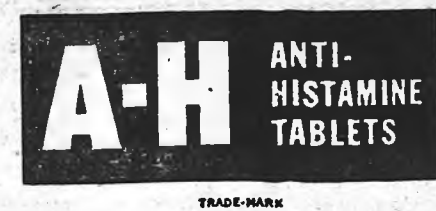

John Watson of New Bern was best man. Groomsmen were Capt. Joe McNulty of Raleigh, Richard Jones of Wilson, D. R. Huff of Ashley Heights, N. C. and John Eubanks of McCain, brother of the groom.

The mother of the bride was dressed in a floor length gown of taupe crepe and matching lace. She wore a corsage of yellow roses. The bridegroom's mother wore a floor length gown of burgandy velvet and her flowers were yellow roses.

The bride and bridegroom left immediately after the reception of Investigation in Washington, D. C. Me. Eubanks is a graduate of Hoke County High School, Darlington School for Boys at Rome, Ga. and N. C. State College in Ceramic Engineering 1948. He served four years in the Army in World War II in the European Theatre. After their wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Eubanks will be at home at Alexandria, Va. Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the brides parents.
