

Poole's Medley

BY D. SCOTT POOLE

My father never bought a pound of commercial fertilizer in his life and I could not persuade him to buy any. I would not plant unless I could fertilize.

Father said those buying fertilizers were not doing any better, but I told him they were unless they let their crops get grassy, because grass will get all the fertilizer.

The peaches of the long ago beat these we have today for sweetness. Folks have told me that my taste is not the same as it was when I ate peaches from seedlings, but I'm not so sure.

The fruit is as different as my taste. Those peaches needed but little sugar to make the best of pies a mortal ever ate.

Some people like this bitter twang some peaches have but my pie is not improved with a bitter taste that makes me scringe.

War is demoralizing, and that is one reason I oppose the enlisting of 18 year olds into the military service. They will grow rather bitter as they grow older.

You do not feel right when you do a class of work that soils in spite of all caution, and you wish you did not have on your Sunday-best clothes.

The puppy we have living with us is amusing. He was loose in the house with the leash on, and he lay down and chewed the leather strap into short bits.

If we had the gumption to get rid of those things that hinder us, we would be as sensible as the brute creation around us.

The latest killing frost I remember was on April 26, 1872. The leaves were nearly grown when that frost came, and they grew slowly for the second time.

The earliest spring I ever saw came in 1884. The leaves were grown by March 15 but on the evening of March 28, a thundercloud and heavy wind and rain came, and the weather turned very cold, freezing cold, and the ground was frozen for the next three mornings. The trees did not produce common sized leaves in 1884. The dead buds and leaves seemed in the way.

The fixing of the price of cotton months before the crop is planted is an unusual proceeding, but it may be wise, even if it makes some mad.

We never get too old to learn. And most of us need to keep reviewing for we forget. Remember Knowledge comes. Wisdom stays.

The Freezer Locker is quite a necessity for the best living Those who rent a locker and fill it have a real treat of their own.

There were only two or three brick chimneys in our section in 1865, but brick chimneys displaced stick and dirt by 1870 nearly everywhere.

State College Hints To Farm Homemakers

PAINT PROTECTION
Washing painted woodwork generally is scheduled for spring cleaning time. To protect and save the paint, home management specialists offer several suggestions:

Any paint can be damaged by strongly alkaline soap or other cleaners, abrasive powder and rubbing. Coarse scouring powder and strong cleaners remove or roughen the smooth outer surface of the paint so that it soils faster and is more difficult to clean. Strong alkali can weaken and also discolor paint. It is wise to try out any new cleaning preparation on an inconspicuous part of the paint first, carefully following directions that come with it as to how much and how to use.

A mild neutral soap is satisfactory for washing paint. If scouring is necessary, finely powdered whiting is suggested because it is one of the finest abrasives and is inexpensive by the pound at paint, hardware or drug stores.

In washing paint, it is important to wash only a small area at a time and rinse carefully before moving on to another area. Even a mild soap contains some alkali that will eventually injure paint if left on it. Directions for some commercial paint cleaning preparations suggest that no rinsing is needed. Yet many are highly alkaline and will damage the surface if left on. Some cleaning solutions make the paint soft while it is wet and then rubbing can damage it. With such cleaners there may be less damage from leaving a very little cleaner on the surface than from rubbing while rinsing. Be sure to use only the amount of cleaner suggested in the directions.

Some of the new detergents, like soap, are alkaline; others are slightly acid or neutral. They are satisfactory for washing painted surfaces in the kitchen or wherever a greasy film has formed.

Inoculating legume seed is a much more exact treatment now than it was only a few years ago.

Peach Crop In Good Condition

Raleigh, April 11—The Tar Heel peach crop is in good condition, especially in the Sandhills area where blooms have been unusually heavy this spring.

This was reported today by the Federal-State Crop Reporting Service. The agency said some orchards were nipped by frost late in March but that apparently little damage resulted.

Meanwhile, the condition of truck crops throughout the state is reported as fair to good. The agency said reports from southern counties indicate truck crop conditions are generally good.

Some cotton has been planted in southern counties of the state, and planting corn is getting underway in the Eastern and Piedmont counties.
