

Veterans Must Follow Rules To Stay In Training

Veterans Administration today reminded veterans training under the GI Bill of some basic rules and regulations that must be followed in order to stay in training at Government expense, now that the July 22 cut-off date for starting has passed. The post-cut-off-date rulings apply to most, but not all, veterans now in training. Those few not affected include veteran trainees who were discharged from service less than four years ago, and whose individual cut-off dates have not yet arrived. Here are VA's "do's" and "don'ts" of post-cut-off-date training:

A veteran continuing his training after the cut-off-date must pursue his course continuously until it is completed—except for interruptions under conditions beyond his control. Such allowable interruptions include the normal summer vacation, as well as recall to active military service. Once a veteran completes or discontinues his course after the cut-off-date, he may not start another. Satisfactory reasons for change are these:

1. When a veteran is not making satisfactory progress in his present course and the failure is not due to his own misconduct, neglect or lack of application.

2. When the course to which he desires to change is more in keeping with aptitudes, previous education, training or other pertinent factors.

3. When the course to which he wants to change is a normal progression from his current course, and will help him attain his educational or vocational objectives.

No additional changes of course will be approved, except for the most cogent reasons, VA said.

VA explained that most veterans not actually in training on the July 25 cut-off date no longer are eligible for the GI Bill training benefit. But those who had enrolled before the deadline may continue until they complete their courses or run out of GI entitlement. For the great majority of veterans, the entire GI training program winds up on July 25, 1956.

Plentiful Foods Listed For Month

Apples are first on the U. S. Department of Agriculture's plentiful foods list for the Southeast for October, the county home demonstration agent for the State College Extension Service, reported this week.

The apple crop this year is estimated at 119 million bushels, and volume marketings during the month should keep generous supplies of apples in most Southern food stores.

Broilers and fryers are next on the October list, followed by turkeys, dry beans, cheese, skim milk products, fish fillets, canned apples and applesauce, table grapes, processed citrus products, cabbage, onions, and honey.

The home agent said marketing of broilers and fryers in the coming month may average as much as a third above the same month last year. The turkey crop this year is a record high, and a large part of the crop will be marketed by the end of October.

Grapes are another record crop, with production of all classes estimated at about 3,166,000 tons. A heavy volume of table grapes is usually sent to market in October, and good supplies should be found in most food shops throughout the Southeast.
