TARHEEL WILDLIFE SKETCHES

MAKE IT SAFETY FIRST AFLOAT

Know your equipment and keep it in good condition

Overloading

Carry necessary spares and tools - also an anchor and rope - more fuel than you could need is a must

The number of seats does not indicate the carrying capacity of a boat - when entering a boat always step in the center

Power

Balancing

Always distribute the load to get the boat in boat and motor in balance

Foolishness can end in tragedy - should be avoided on the water

Use only the motor your boat was designed for - or when in motor to the boat

In a blow keep the bow pointed into the waves at a slight angle and travel at reduced speed - weight should be kept low in the boat

Alcohol is a poor counselor when you're out on the water

PINCHLESS CHAIN SAW

GARDEN TIME

Since the rains and cool weather have arrived we are having a great deal of trouble with plant diseases and insect pests.

Those of you who like to grow a fall crop of tomatoes will have to be on the alert. I have noticed heavy infection with leaf spot on some varieties. That will cause defoliation of the plants and of course loss of most of the crop. Also, at this time of year, and especially in the mountain area, we are troubled with late blight disease on tomatoes. Late blight will destroy the tomato fruits as well as the leaves.

For these diseases the plants should be kept covered with a good copper spray such as Tri-basic Copper Sulfate or Copper A Compound. Use these sprays according to directions given on the container. Another pest of tomatoes at this time of the year is the tobacco horn worm. Most tobacco growers know this pest very well. It will completely defoliate a tomato plant in a short time if not taken care of. In small gardens hand picking is the easiest remedy. In larger patches a spray of any of the stomach poisons will do the job.

The harlequin cabbage bug, sometimes called the terrapin bug, may give a lot of trouble with late cabbage, collards, mustard, and turnips. A 20 per cent Sabadilla dust, obtainable at most of the larger seed stores will control the harlequin bug effectively.

If your late sweet corn is being eaten up by bug worms, dust into the bud with a 5 per cent DDT dust. This dust applied to the silks as soon as they appear will effectively reduce the amount of ear worm damage also. At least two applications should be made.

See your county agent for N. C. Agricultural Extension bulletins on vegetable insect and disease control.
