KIDD BREWER—Kidd Brewer of Raleigh and secretary to the late Senator J. W. Bailey and also to Governor Umstead while the latter served in the United States Senate, and who offered to serve temporarily as United States Senator while Umstead was picking a man to fill Hoot's place, is now reported to be willing to serve as North Carolina's lieutenant governor. Reports are that should Brewer run for the State's number two job he would go about over the state in a car-trailer similar to the outfit used by Mayme and Frances Albright in Albright's unsuccessful bid for governor in 1948.

Brewer is regarded as closely identified with the conservative element of the Democratic party in North Carolina. He conducts a weekly political column from Raleigh carried by a large number of North Carolina non-daily newspapers.

L. T. GOVERNOR—The State's number two job is generally regarded as about the easiest of the big political jobs to win. The job pays only a small salary, just enough to take care of his living requirements during the sessions of the General Assembly.

Should Kidd Brewer from Raleigh and Terry Sanford from Fayetteville both run, people would have the opportunity of voting for a representative from either the conservative or the "Go-Forward" wing of the party, with Brewer representing the conservatives and Sanford the liberals.

WAYNICK—We hear that Capus Waynick, former U. S. Ambassador to Nicaragua, former chairman of the State Highway Commission, former newspaper editor, and a former State Senator, may be the man who will oppose Senator Ervin for the Democratic nomination in 1956. Waynick's ambition for many years has been to serve in the United States Senate. He is a liberal and smart as a whip. Had Frank Graham won the Senate race in 1950, Waynick might have run for Governor in '52. If Sam Ervin doesn't show up well in the committee investigating McCarthy, keep an eye peeled toward High Point and Capus Waynick.

COMMITTEE—Governor Umstead's committee to study the supreme court's ruling abolishing segregation in our public schools is generally regarded as a fine committee. The colored race is represented with three of their State leaders. The conservatives are well represented and the "Go-Forward" group are represented. And each group is represented with good thinkers.

Do not expect this committee to come forward with some half-baked and unreasonable approach to the problem. Their recommendations will likely set the course for North Carolina.

DUST—Dust control in our rural areas on the rural roads is a matter that is fast coming to the front in North Carolina. In many sections the dust is so bad that the people have to keep their windows closed even in the hottest weather to keep as much dust as possible out of the house.

The State Highway Commission is now studying the problem and don't be surprised to see them come up by next spring with some kind of a dust control experiment.

There are two or three approaches to the matter that are possible. In the summertime the dust is as bad as the mud in the wintertime. Unless the Highway Commission tackles the problem, don't be surprised to see some candidate for governor running on a plank to take the people out of the dust as Kerr Scott advocated taking them out of the mud.

D. SCOTT POOLE—D. Scott Poole, veteran Raeford newspaperman, observed his 96th birthday at his home in Raeford on Tuesday, August 3. In the 20's Poole represented Hoke County for three terms in the North Carolina General Assembly, serving during the 1923, 1927, and 1929 sessions. He gained statewide fame when he sponsored the "Poole anti-evolution" bill in North Carolina about the time that William Jennings Bryan and Clarence Darrow were making history at the trial of John T. Scopes who was tried and convicted of teaching evolution in the Dayton, Tenn., public school. Poole, an elder in the Raeford Presbyterian church, is a former turpentine planter, farmer, school teacher and printer, as well as a former publisher and legislator. He is Hoke County's "Grand Old Man."

FARM ITEMS

On Friday, October 15, you along with the other farmers of North Carolina will have the opportunity to vote in a referendum. The purpose of this referendum is to decide whether you want your feed and fertilizer assessed 5 cents per ton. The money collected in this assessment amounts to about $140,000 a year and is used for agricultural research and education in North Carolina. This will be known as the "Nickels for Know-How" referendum and from now on will be referred to as such.

Any person who buys a bag of feed or fertilizer during the year is eligible to vote. A polling place has been set up in the Hoke High School for the benefit of 4-H and FFA members who are eligible to vote.

The money is collected by the Department of Agriculture and turned over to the Agricultural Foundation of North Carolina, and a complete statement of where the money is used is available to anybody who requests it. You will see a very large amount of publicity on this referendum within the next two months.

Any person whose feed or fertilizer is assessed a nickel a ton and feels that his money has not been properly used or who is dissatisfied for other reasons may get his money back by applying to the foundation. The program was first voted in in 1931, and the law says it must be voted on each third year to see if it is acceptable to you. It is now time for another referendum.

The polling places for Hoke

County are set up as follows: Allendale, Allendale Community House; Anfach, Hodgins Store; Blue Springs, Hoke Trading Co.; Little River, Jones' Store and Brooks' Store; McLauchlin, Newton's Service Station and A. W. Wood's Store; Quewhiffle, Johnson's Store; Raeford, Hoke High School and County Office Building; and Stonewall, Dundarrach Trading Company.

Red spider or spider mites are doing extensive damage in Hoke County and are reported to be doing extensive damage throughout North Carolina. Most of the fields I have seen this week are infested to one degree or another with red spiders.

These insects are very small and you have to look closely to see them. Their presence is not hard to detect because of the damage they do to cotton. The old standby treatment is sulphur dust, and it is still a good one. Use whatever amount it takes to get your leaves covered on the underside. Other dusts you can use are: Parathion 1% and Aramite 3%. Spray materials that can be used are: 1/5 of a pound of Parathion or 1 pound of wettable Demeton per acre. Use enough water with these materials to get good coverage. Also 4% TEPP at the rate of 1/2 pint per acre will do a good job. This can be incorporated with your boll weevil control materials if you are still treating for boll weevils.

Usually one treatment of Demeton or Parathion will be sufficient whereas two or three treatments of the other materials are usually needed. There are cases in Hoke County where it will probably not pay to treat because of the condition of the cotton, but if you do plan to combat these insects, the above information will be helpful.

Ladino clover has not proven as successful in Hoke County as it has in most parts of North Carolina; however, there are a few good pastures here. If you are interested in learning more about it, a brand new bulletin—

Extension Circular 301—entitled "Ladino Clover" has just arrived at the County Agent's office.

Alfalfa can be grown successfully in all sections of North Carolina with the exception of the Tidewater areas.
