News For Veterans

Points in connection with the Federal program of education assistance to war orphans were summarized by the Veterans Administration.

Those generally eligible under the program are young people between the ages of 18 and 23 who are the children of veterans who have died from disease or injury incurred or aggravated in line of duty in active service during World War I, World War II or the Korean conflict.

The parent or guardian of the deceased veteran's child must file an application with VA. If VA finds that the basic eligibility requirements are met, the application will be approved provisionally.

Next, the young man or woman, accompanied by the parent or guardian, will receive VA vocational counseling, to assist him or her in the selection of a goal and development of a program of education. Meanwhile, the parent or guardian must prepare an educational plan showing the selected goal, the program of education, school or schools he plans to attend, and an estimate of the total cost of the education. The plan becomes part of the application.

On-the-job training, also on-farm training and correspondence courses may not be taken under the War Orphans program, but most other types of school and college training may be taken. The courses must be those that carry approval for VA training under the Korean GI bill.

In some instances, handicapped children may begin a special vocational or restorative course as early as age 14. Such special training includes speech and voice correction, lip-reading, Braille reading and writing and the like.

Generally an eligible young person may receive up to 36 months of schooling under the War Orphans program. Persons enrolled will receive $110 a month if enrolled full time; $80 a month if enrolled three-quarters time and $50 a month if half-time.

Full information on the program can be secured from any VA office.

The Travelers Insurance Companies studies show that exceeding the speed limit caused 12,770 deaths and 980,000 injuries during 1958 on our highways.
