USE FOR COTTON PLANT

Production of cotton in Orange County is almost nil. However, Mrs. Betty Jones of Terrell's Creek Community near Chapel Hill, raises a few rows of cotton to use in floral decorations and other hand-craft designs.

According to S.N. Shelton, agricultural Extension agent, "Mrs. Jones, who specializes in the production of flowers, finds cotton engages the beauty of her floral designs."

Mrs. Jones, along with several other Orange County women, gather on Franklin Street in Chapel Hill daily to market their flowers. These "flower ladies" are a Chapel Hill tradition, Shelton adds.

AIDES PLAY SANTA

Wayne County Nutrition aides helped "Santa" deliver food to needy families at Christmas. The real Santas were members of the Officers' Wives Club at Seymour Johnson Air Force Base. The improvised sleigh was a military truck and the cargo was 15 baskets of food.

This project spelled "happiness" for a large number of persons, Mrs. Evelyn Raper, home economics Extension agent, believes.

Mrs. Lincoln Hill, chairman of the project said, "We had no idea of the dire need so near us. We are grateful for the chance to help."

The aides also felt satisfaction. "Although we remained in the background," they said, "the joy on the children's faces when the candy canes were passed out brought tears to our eyes."

HARD TO BE SPECTATOR

Sometimes it's harder to be a spectator than it is a participant. 4-H'er Allan Mullis, Yadkin County, believes.

Allan, who won the county Tractor Operators Demonstration last year was too young to enter district competition. So county runner-up Johnny Henderson did the honors.

Icebergs One Day May Augment World's Supply Of Fresh Water

Cities of the future may live in an iceberg to help solve water shortages.

For decades, men have sought to tap the abundant water locked in the polar icecaps. Antarctica alone holds about 80 percent of the Earth's fresh water in its frozen grip.

More than a century ago, ships from San Francisco sailed to Alaska to bring back lake ice. But in 1853, when mild weather slowed the freezing of lakes, glacier ice proved a satisfactory substitute, the National Geographic Society says.

Oceanographers have suggested that icebergs could be towed to the West Coast to furnish water for Southern California's desert.

Two United States scientists recently estimated that if an iceberg 250 yards thick and 2,700 yards across were towed to Australia, it would provide 207 billion gallons of water—even though 70 percent of the iceberg would melt during the trip.

Dr. William Campbell, of the Department of the Interior's Geological Survey, and Dr. Wilford Weeks of the Army's Cold Regions Research and Engineering Laboratory, concluded that a sea-going tug could make the voyage for less than $1 million. The fresh water obtained from the iceberg would be worth about $5.5 million.

This would be less than a tenth of the cost for an equivalent amount of desalted sea water.

The scientists had in mind tabular, or flat-surfaced icebergs that form when the continental ice shelf covering Antarctica is eroded by the pressure of tides, storms, snowfalls, and even earthquakes.

For example, ice formation thrusts the 180,000-square-mile Ross Ice Shelf seaward as much as four feet in a day. Icebergs—some larger than American states—are broken off from the shelf's edge by the action of the sea.

In 1956 the Navy icebreaker Glacier skirted a tabular iceberg 208 miles long, 80 miles wide and about 1,000 feet thick. The 12,000-square-mile mass nearly equaled Connecticut and Massachusetts combined.

Icebergs found in the Arctic usually are mountainous rather than tabular, and frequently assume fanciful shapes. These floating castles and cathedrals sometimes become top-heavy as they melt. A ship attempting to tow one would risk being crushed if the iceberg capsized.

As many as 20,000 Arctic icebergs can form in a single year, primarily from glaciers pushing into the sea. Where the seabed drops away sharply from the land, the sea eats into the overhanging ice until it breaks off as an iceberg.

Winston Churchill suggested towing icebergs in World War II, but not for water. A British historian quotes him:

"Let us cut a large chunk of ice from the Arctic icecap and tow it down past Cornwall, fly on our aircraft and tow it to the point of attack."

Tips Subject To Tax Withholding

Greensboro—Tips are taxable income and also subject to withholding when they are over a certain amount. Those who receive cash tips of $20 or more in any calendar month from one employer, should report them to that employer according to J. E. Wall, District Director of Internal Revenue for North Carolina. Wall said cash tips are subject to withholding of income and Social Security taxes and must be reported to the employer on or before the 10th day of the following month.

For more information, write for IRS Publication 531, "Reporting Your Tips for Federal Tax Purposes." It explains the requirements of the law and contains illustrations of the forms needed to make the necessary reports to employers.

Wall emphasized that tip income counts toward Social Security and Railroad Retirement benefits and can result in higher benefits for the employee and his family.
