WASHINGTON ... Confronted with a' new national mood and changing priorities, the President's State of the Union Address eloquently presented the challenges of the new decade. The Address, however, did not blueprint proposed solutions to our problems. The Chief Executive said he would propose his remedies in a dozen or more special messages to the Congress later in the

There was much common ground between the sentiments of the President and the Nation of the President and the Nation on what the problems are. With respect to foreign policy, he called for an end of the Vietnam War through a just peace. He announced also that his foreign policy would deal with the realities of a world with the realities of a world that has changed much in the last twenty - five years, and said the time has come for us to "reduce our involvement and our presence in other nations' affairs." In essence, what the President appeared to be saying was that we have strained our economy and our resources in trying to act as the world's policeman, an opinion which I have expressed many times during the last two decades.

The two other key issues mentioned by the President --inflation and crime control -certainly strike a responsive note in the minds of Americans. I am gratified that the President announced that he would present a balanced budget for fiscal 1971. He correctly blamed deficit Federal spending which has occurred in many prior years as the cause of today's rising prices. In calling for a broad attack on crime, the President was emphasizing anew what most Americans have urged for some time. It should be remembered, however, that neither of these most pressing domestic problems has yet been responsive to simple rhetoric. Any relief in these areas will require the cooperative efforts of our entire governmental structure. Congress and the Executive branch must work together to control Federal spending and inflation. Both of these branches of the Government sorely need the cooperation of the Judicial branch to cope with crime.

The President laudably gave environmental pollution control a priority status in the Administration's catalogue of programs. Unquestionably, there is much need to continue the major programs enacted by the Congress in this area in recent years. There was some friction between Congress and the Administration at the last session when Congress raised the budget request for anti pollution control. It remains to be seen just how the President

Mrs. Phyllis Robeson, Girl Scout Trainer and Field Director for Harnett, Lee and Moore counties, and Mrs. Winston McRae, new Trainer for Hoke County and one of Hoke County's troop organizers, conducted a Badge Moore Workshop, Jan. 21st, at the Methodist Church. Following the regular Girl Scout Neighborhood Association Meeting, the workshop was held for the benefit of the leaders and consultants of Junior, Cadette, and Senior troops. The badges under discussion are Proviciency Badges and are presented to the Girl Scouts after they complete the work required for each badge. Local volunteer program consultants were called upon to help the troops in areas where special instruction is needed. Mrs. McRac recently finished extensive training at the Pines of Carolina Girl Scout Council in Raleigh. She will train new leaders and conduct future workshops. Hoke County is very fortunate to have her as a Trainer. With the shortage of Trainers in the council, it has been a problem to have training locally: Previously, Hoke County volunteers have had to rely in training obtained in other counties. Mrs. McRae, of Route 3, is an LPN at McCain, has one son and one daughter, Sharone, who is an active Girl Scout in Troop No. 397.

The next workshop, on Troop Management, is scheduled on Feb. 18th, at 8:00 p.m., in the Methodist Management, is Church. It is available for all troop leaders and consultants.
