Local Business

The term "editorial vitality" is widely bandied by national publications as proof of their value as advertising media.

In every day language, a publication has editorial vitality if it has important meaning to its subscribers. The degree of editorial vitality may be indicated by the extent to which a publication is missed when it is not available to regular readers.

Editorial vitality may be justly considered as one of the significant factors affecting the value of an advertising medium. However, the community newspaper so far surpasses national publications in editorial vitality that it is difficult to understand why a national magazine would mention the term.

By any standard of measurement, the newspaper of local origin has no close competitor in terms of personal significance to the individual reader. There has been ample research to back up this assertion, which must seem pretty obvious to most people.

What other kind of publication is read from front to back by nearly every subscriber? What other publication excites comment and argument on street corners and in barber shops? In what other publication is advertising read as local news?

Or, if more proof is needed, what other editor is threatened or praised as often as the editor of the local newspaper?

If it's editorial vitality an advertiser is looking for, he can find more of it in his local newspaper than anywhere else in the world.

Silver Grove Club Cleans Cemetery

A clean-up Saturday at Silver Grove Community Cemetery will be repeated this Saturday, May 16. Mary K. Thomas, chairman of the cemetery committee announced.

A clean-up project at the cemetery last Saturday was very successful, she said, but more work needs to be done. She urged all the residents in the community to attend.

Many of the graves don't have proper markings, she said. The group also plans to level the plots and prepare the area for re-seeding this Saturday.

Mrs. Thomas asked volunteers to bring hoes, shovels, mowers and other equipment for the all-day project.

Highway Commission Defends Gasoline Tax

The North Carolina Highway Commission, in a "fact sheet" answered charges that have been aimed recently at the 9 1/2 cent per gallon gasoline tax.

North Carolina, which has the highest gas tax in the nation, maintains the largest state road system in the United States, the Commission said. More than 73,000 miles of roads are maintained by the state.

Of the twelve states with gasoline taxes greater than 7 cents a gallon, the next largest state road system is that of Louisiana with 16,000 miles of road.

There are no toll roads in North Carolina, the Commission pointed out. Tolls add an equivalent of about 1 cent per gallon on a nationwide basis. In Virginia, which maintains the third largest state system, tolls are equivalent to an additional 1 1/2 cents per gallon. In New York, tolls equal an addition of more than 4 cents a gallon, the Commission said.

Property taxes and general fund appropriations for highways throughout the nation are the equivalent of about 3 1/2 cents per gallon in taxes. The comparable figures in North Carolina are about 1 1/2 cents per gallon.

There are 467 miles of interstate highways open to traffic out of the 839 miles allocated to the state the Commission said. The state also has 931 miles of four-lane rural primary highway. At least 500 more miles is needed, however, the report said.

Of the 73,000 miles of road in the state system, more than 66,000 miles is paved.

Most of the opposition to the tax has come from the oil companies, the Highway Commission said. However, the oil companies benefit most by the tax through increased travel and gasoline sales. Sales have increased in the state by 5.9 per cent through March 31 of this year the report said.

The report also charged that one of the leading oil companies, Atlantic Richfield Oil Company, with profits from 1962 to 1966 of $411 million, paid no federal income tax on the profit.

The 73,000 miles of roads in the state system represents about 10 per cent of all state maintained roads in the nation, the report said. These are maintained with 3 per cent of the total money spent in the nation, the report said.

American roulette.

It's the risky national game of spending more than you make. And not knowing where your money's gone or what you have to show for it. To blame it all on inflation, credit buying and other factors is to miss the point. Most people are in the same old fix because they've been trying to get out of it in the same old way. Handling money today is far more complicated than it was even ten years ago. It demands new thinking. New ideas. A whole new approach. That's why Southern National invented Incontrol: A new way to help you make it on your income. The key to the program is your Incontrol man. A personal financial counselor specially trained to help solve your problems. You set your own goals. Then together you'll work out a logical, commonsense plan to reach them. All your spending decisions will be based on this plan. Your money will do what you want it to do because you'll control where it's going. Every dollar you spend will count for more. Soon you'll stop playing the great American game of financial brinkmanship. You'll start living. And living better. The cost? Two dollars. One time only. You get an easy-to-follow money management guide, plus special forms that will make money management easier. Get in touch with your Incontrol counselor at the Southern National Bank nearest you.
