

Freezer Makes Picnics Easy

Picnics and camp-outs are easier if you put your freezer to work first, Mrs. Ellen Willis, home economics agent, says.

Hamburger patties and other cook-out fare can be made in quantity ahead of time, wrapped in foil, frozen and taken directly to the grill.

For hamburgers, add one teaspoon of salt, one small onion chopped and pepper to taste to each pound of hamburger that you use. Shape them into patties and place the patties on a baking sheet to freeze. When frozen, wrap in meal size packages. When the time comes for the cookout or picnic, just drop the number of packages needed into the picnic basket.

Besides the reliable hamburger, Mrs. Willis suggests some other freezer tricks for cookouts.

Cheese dogs start with a hot dog cut lengthwise. Fill with small slices of cheese and wrap the "cheese dogs" with slices of uncooked bacon. Put two together and wrap in foil. Freeze. When you are getting ready for your picnic, allow one package per person. To cook, just place the foil package on the hot coals for about ten minutes. Put on a toasted bun or serve off the grill in foil.

Roasting ears may be wrapped in freezer foil and frozen. Thaw slightly before cooking on the grill. Place corn on hot coals or grill to roast.

Melons - watermelon, honeydew and cantaloupe - in slices or balls make good freezer desserts. Use firm, ripe melons and package in freezer containers covered with syrup, orange juice or gingerale.

Cakes may also be frozen. For frosted cakes, freeze the cake first and then wrap it. Butter frostings are best for freezing. It is a good idea to freeze cakes in portions or in individually wrapped slices as well as whole.

Many kinds of sandwiches freeze well. Fillings that may be used are egg yolk, peanut butter, cooked or canned chicken or turkey, cooked or canned meat, dried beef, cream cheese and cheddar cheese. Avoid mayonnaise and use butter or margarine instead.

STORY TIME - Mrs. Lee Cameron, librarian, entertains her young audience with a book at the library story hour held each Thursday morning at 10.

School Will Host Workshop

One of six art workshops throughout the state will be held at Hoke County High School on Aug. 3-12. About 50 teachers are expected to attend the session, which will be conducted by James Oledge of Raleigh.

The workshops are being planned by the Division of Cultural Arts of the State Department of Public Instruction. They are part of a project of the division to bring cultural arts experiences to all North Carolina children, Miss Ruth Jewell, state cultural arts consultant, said.

The most immediate goal of the project is to employ at least one trained person in art in every school system in the State, she said.

About 230 elementary teachers will study at the summer workshops in which art in grades one through eight will be emphasized. Two hours of renewal credit for teachers will be given.

It's never too soon to have a heart and health checkup. It could be too late, advises the North Carolina Heart Association.

Local Business

The value of the newspaper as a promotional medium is most fully appreciated by individuals or groups attempting to gain support for some community project.

If he were willing to take the offers, the local newspapers editor would be publicity chairman of every organization in his hometown. For, leaders accustomed to dealing with the public know that the local newspaper is the key to effective publicity.

The effectiveness of newspapers has been noted by Eric Sevareid, famed journalist and broadcaster. He said that newspaper writing had to be done with great care.

"Six months later you have your statements staring you in the face in a black-and-white record... Listeners forget what you said on radio and tv," Mr. Sevareid states.

Of course these observations should apply to advertising as well as other content. And it is the black-and-white record which makes newspaper advertising valuable to the local merchant.

As Mr. Sevareid suggests, anyone - merchant or newsman - who displays information in print may be called to account for the publication.

The retailer who is not honest in his newspaper advertising is rare indeed.
