Stripes Need Extra Care In Pattern Choice, Cut

By Brenda Abrams, Assistant Home Economics Agent

The moment of decision is at hand! Surrounded by a treasure trove of fabrics displayed at the counter, you choose a stripe design for the dress you are going to sew. Always fashion - right, stripes add interest to the simplest style and can be handled to achieve striking effects. The type of stripe you choose depends on your own taste and figure type. Small - scale stripes are best for the petite, while larger - scale stripes flatter taller women. Vertical stripes add slimmness and height to the figure while horizontal stripes shorten and widen the figure. To balance a figure, stripes may be used both vertically and horizontally in the same garment, or cut on the diagonal or true bias. "Advance planning" is important in selecting the stripe that looks smartest on you.

The next step is choosing a dress pattern. For best results, pick a simple pattern with comparatively few pattern pieces, and check to make sure that striped fabrics are recommended for use on the pattern envelope. Then, select your stripe! Ask yourself if it is appropriate for the style of your dress and your figure type. Study the design of the stripe you select. Is it balanced or unbalanced? A balanced (or even) stripe design repeats its pattern from left to right of the main, dominant stripe, making it easy to match and sew. An unbalanced (or uneven) stripe design varies in pattern and spacing, and requires some special preparation in laying out and cutting. Sometimes it is difficult to tell whether a stripe design is balanced or not. Here's how to find out: Fold the fabric in half along the dominant or main stripe to see if the stripes repeat. If the design and coloring repeat exactly, the stripe design is balanced.

Because striped fabrics must be matched at the seams, you will need to buy more fabric than would be necessary for a solid fabric. If the pattern you are using does not specify yardage for striped fabric, buy an extra eighth - of - a - yard for a narrow stripe design, an extra quarter - of - a - yard for medium - width stripes. For large - scale stripes, an extra half - a - yard to a full yard is safest.

Preparation pays off when you're sewing with stripes. So, it is very important for you to study your dress pattern and fabric carefully. If you use your stripe design vertically, choose the dominant stripe design to run up and down the center front and center back. Once you establish the position of the center front lengthwise line, you will find it easy to match all the other pieces in relation to it. If you will use your stripe design horizontally, plan to have the dominant stripe run across the bodice front and back and just below the shoulders, matching the stripes at the seams. The stripe design should match at the stitching line of the pattern pieces rather than the cutting line.

Some specific hints for cutting and sewing stripes will be the topic of next week's article.

Farm Items

BY W. S. YOUNG, COUNTY EXTENSION CHAIRMAN

With the severity of the Southern Blight of Corn, it is necessary that a good sanitation and rotation program be put into effect this fall. The cutting and shredding of stalks followed by deep plowing will help to reduce the amount of primary inoculum in the spring. It is also important that you do not pull any of the corn residue back to the top of the ground in spring plowing as the fungus will reproduce. A small grain cover crop in the fall followed by no till planting of crops in the spring is recommended.

The degree of success in reducing this infection will depend on how well all growers accept the responsibility of destroying all of this crop's residue.

A very important new regulation regarding the handling of Government Loan Cotton has been made this year, and one that farmers should not overlook. When the grower receives his Government Classification Card showing grade and staple length of his cotton, there will be a date on it. The new regulations state that if a farmer wants to place his cotton in Government Loan, he must place it in the bonded warehouse within 15 days of the date shown on the card. If he does not do this and decides later to put it in, a new sample must be sent in for classification and the total cost of this will run about $1.00 per bale.

The purpose of this new regulation is to help keep the cotton in top condition and also to sell to the mills the same grades of cotton that the sample represented.

Student Librarians Organize New Club

The football program vendor at home games is a member of Hoke High's newest club, The Library Club.

Selling the programs for a dime each is one of the fund-raising projects the club has undertaken to finance participation in the state library clubs convention next spring and for field trips to other libraries in the area.

The club was organized Sept. 17 to increase pupil's interest and participation in the school library and the audio-visual work to attract library assistants and to arouse interest in the area of librarianship and audio-visual coordination as a profession.

Twenty-five members were present at the organization of the club. As officers, they chose Teru Monroe, president; Faye Quick, vice-president; Patricia Farmer, secretary and Ann Monroe, treasurer.

Club members spend at least one period a school day working in the library, for which they receive 1/2 unit of credit for the second year for each period. Many of the students work more than one period a day.

"The library wouldn't function without the help of these students," Mrs. Paul Solomon, school librarian, said.

The 44 library assistants work at such jobs as circulating library materials, processing books and other materials, working the card catalog, seeing that books are in order on the shelves, and assisting in the audio-visual room of the library.

The students also staff the new paper-back book room. As a fund-raising project, a wide variety of paper backed books are sold to the high school students.

Club advisors are Mrs. Solomon, Mrs. Larry Beatty and Mrs. George Wood.

Guests Speak To DECA Class

By Bobby Smith

The Distributive Education Class had two guest speakers last week. Bill Shankle, the assistant personal manager for Burlington Industries, spoke on "How to take an interview." Then on Thursday, Willet Bissett, the textile teacher at Hoke High School showed slides of the different types of work that is done at Burlington. Mr. Bissett was preparing the D.E. class for a tour of Raeford's Burlington plant. On September 15 the D.E. class took their first field trip of the year to the Burlington Plant. The tour was led by Mr. Bill Shankle and lasted for two hours.

For classroom work, the Distributive Education students will be taking surveys of all the stores in the downtown area and many stores outside the city limits. These surveys will help the students understand how businesses are operated and give them an insight of their management.

A trip to Raleigh has been planned for Tuesday, Sept. 22. The D.E. students will go to North Hills Shopping Center and observe how the modern shopping centers are operated. The class will also go to the museum and the state capitol for a tour.

The DECA Club will be handling all the concessions at the football games. The members will be under the supervision of the D.E. students and have set up two extra stands in hopes that the stands will handle the rush during half-time.

Lennon Enters Busing Issue

Representative Alton Lennon announced today that he had joined in filing a brief with the Supreme Court relating to the problem of busing students to accomplish racial balance in the schools.

The brief sets forth the legislative history of the anti-agreement amendment to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and precisely what Congress intended by its wording.

"The Congress has expressly forbidden the assignment and transportation of pupils to overcome racial imbalance," the Congressman stated. "It is essential that the Supreme Court go into the question in depth and write a comprehensive opinion that reflects the will and the intent of the representatives of the people in the Congress," Lennon stressed.

The Supreme Court has announced that it will review school assignment cases during the October term.

There is no doubt that the decision reached will determine the future of American education," the Congressman stated. "and it is my hope that our basic neighborhood concept and high quality of education will be preserved."
