—SEN. SAM—

Continued from page 2 reveal that a deficit was really a surplus by excluding items like foreign aid payments, monies to support military forces, and appropriations for surplus agricultural products given away overseas under Public Law 480.

On May 10th, the hard realities were with us again. The German mark was devalued. In swift order, the Dutch guild, the Swiss franc, and the Austrian schilling also went up in value as compared with the dollar.

The consequences of these actions may curtail for a time the import of goods into this country and may revive some American exports overseas. But the fact is that the dollar continues to be in trouble because this nation simply refuses to put its financial house in order.

One of the focal points of this issue came up last week when Senator Mansfield offered an amendment to reduce the number of American troops stationed in Europe because our NATO allies are refusing to pay their equitable share of the costs involved. In the background of this amendment was the dollar crisis. For some years now, we have maintained about 300,000 U.S. troops and about 200,000 of their dependents. This has resulted in vast sums of American dollars being transferred to Europe without a consequent inflow of European currencies to this country. Senator Mansfield has been pleading with the Administration for years to reduce the number of American troops in Europe to reduce this outflow of our money to Europe.

The Mansfield Amendment was rejected. I voted against it because I did not want to jeopardize the extension of the draft, the measure to which the amendment was attached. Moreover, I think there are risks involved in a precipitous action being taken which could imperil our collective security against Russia and the Warsaw Pact nations.

I am constrained to say that I do have much sympathy with the motives which prompted Senator Mansfield to offer his amendment. It is of much concern to me that the United States must bear an unreasonable burden in defending Western Europe when most of its nations are enjoying substantial prosperity. NATO has been the bulwark in the collective security of much of the free world for years. Europe has enjoyed sufficient calm and stability by reason of this organization to achieve immense economic progress, and the time has come when it ought to be willing to pay its share of the cost.

The Administration must make this plain to our European allies, and soon.

Garden Time

BY M. E. GARDNER

Anent the new fragrant white dogwood, "Fragrant Cloud", Mrs. Johann Sonner of Chapel Hill writes - "recently I discovered on our lot at least one fragrantly blooming dogwood. There is possibly another one—".

I wrote Mrs. Sonner, that while "Fragrant Cloud" was discovered growing in the wild it does not mean that it is the only fragrant dogwood extant. The point is, that a very reputable company paid for the propagating rights, patented the plant and are offering trees for sale at $12.75 each.

Many plants have been discovered growing in the wild as chance seedlings, the popular Golden Delicious apple being a classical example. Here are a few others of a long list: Elberta, Greensboro and Georgia Belle peach varieties; Stayman Winesap, Red Delicious, Limbertwig, Kind David and Grimes Golden apple varieties; and Scuppernon, James, Thomas and Mish of the Muscadine grape family.

All of these varieties were discovered between 1820 and 1891, long before controlled breeding of horticultural crops came into the picture.

I think that it would be of interest to all of my readers to be constantly on the alert to discover any variations in plant behavior that might be observed. This would be especially true with the brambles, raspberries, blackberries, dewberries; blueberries; apples; grapes; and some of the ornamentals.

The forests of eastern Carolina are full of seedling Muscadine grapes, blackberries and blueberries. The same is true in western Carolina for raspberries, blackberries, blueberries and bunch grapes. Many years ago we discovered a wide selection of seedling species of blueberries in the Grandfather Mountain and Jones Ridge areas which we found useful in our blueberry breeding program.

Getting back to dogwoods, I had a letter from Mrs. Bill Davidson of Elkin requesting the source of supply of "Fragrant Cloud" and also other white and pink varieties. Thinking that you, too, might be interested here they are: Cloud 9 (white), blooms early; Cherokee Chief (ruby red); White Cloud; Apple Blossom (pink); Spring Song (rose red); Cherokee Princess (white).

FOLKLORE—By varying fabric and trim, two different looks are created from the same pattern. Flower-sprigged cotton calico (left) takes on country-girl flavor with a braid and rick rack border on bodice and skirt. At right, striped cotton gets ultra-feminine treatment with Venice lace and butterfly ruffling trim. The skirt border is made from a wide strip of the fabric outlined with lace. All trims by Wm. E. Wright & Sons. Pattern is McCall's No. 2639.
