Significant legislation passed the House this week and I'm not especially proud of all of

I earned my halo, however, by voting aye on the Obscenity bill. Although many have applauded its passage it has the possibility of setting off a witches hunt. It would have been frightfully unladylike to have opposed it for there is no question about there being an abundance of trash in print, on abundance of trash in print, on film and on TV. I cannot help film and on TV. I cannot help being a bit amused at newspaper editors who praise the open meeting bill and the obscenity bill in the same breath. Censorship by any name is ... well, censorship. Two bills to aid private colleges sailed through the House. If these two bills get past the Senate and Appropriations Committees, I fear North Carolina has some bitter tears in store. They violate all principles of democracy and separation of church and state. There seems very little chance of them very little chance of them failing for the members of the General Assembly lean heavily toward favoring higher education anyway and so many are graduates of private institutions. I truly pray that I am seeing goblins where none

It struck me as ironic that these two enabling bills were approved just as the House was repealing legislation enacted in 1955 concerning schools. I opposed the Pearsall bill many years ago and it is not much years ago and it is not much comfort to have time prove one right. Think of all the time The Pearsall plan was fatally unconstitutional. These two aid to private school bills are much more subtle and much more deadly. It will probably be years before the results are seen and the damage to our public schools may be irrevocable.

To ease my heartache over these bills which I consider North Carolina's worst legislation in many a day, I came home and attacked my neglected flower bed. You can could have separate district but everyone seemed to want to keep the 24th intact. Barring a challenge on the plan, we'll live with that arrangement for ten years. Wednesday the 24th district delegation, together with delegation, together with several other representatives, sponsored a bill to create a Commission on Indian affairs. Quite a few people from Pembroke were on hand along with others representing the Coharies, Waccamaw Siouans, Cherokees, and Walihas. The Lumbees had so many representatives that I dare not try to list all the names for fear of leaving someone out. We were glad to have them there and hope the bill will be enacted into law.

The funniest thing that happened all week was the absolute confusion that ensued when the report of the University Trustees committee was presented to joint session. Lawrence Davis of Winston Salem, freshman at that, dared to make a nomination from the floor. Apparently the committee report is almost sacred and heretofore everyone had just accepted it without question. Once Mr. Davis nominated someone else, everybody got into the act and our most able and efficient presiding officers were at a loss as to what to do. In desperation they declared a

When we reconvened at 2:15 it was announced that the trustee problem would be settled next week. Laurinburg's Ellen Newbold was one of the committee nominees and I hope she will be elected officially Tuesday.

Thursday afternoon I attended the hearing on a bill concerning the taxation of farm land. The auditorium was filled and overflowing with farmers but I didn't see anyone from Robeson, Scotland or
