Magazine Peddlers

The Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's office has reported receiving a number of complaints against a group of door-to-door magazine salesmen who operated briefly in the Raleigh area. The salesmen, claiming to be competing on a point basis for a European tour allegedly made several misrepresentations of fact in the course of their presentations.

Misrepresentations pertained to the number of points needed by the salesman to win the prize and the time remaining in the contest, the minimum number of magazine issues which could be ordered, and the existence of special rates for students.

Some salesmen were known to have told customers that the salesman was responsible for the payment of any order once he had started "writing it up" even though the order is not authorized or refused by the customer.

The Attorney General warns citizens to be very careful in their dealings with these salesmen, and ask anyone suspecting such misrepresentation to obtain the name of the salesman and then contact the Consumer Protection Division.
