4-H Corner

By Brenda L. Abrams & Phil Ricks
 County 4-H Agents

Budding young 4-H leaders are now assured their efforts will not go unnoticed. Providing that assurance is Reader's Digest, new sponsor of the national 4-H leadership program supervised by the Cooperative Extension Service.

As sponsor of the program, which recognized leadership accomplishments at county, state and national levels, Reader's Digest offers a full schedule of awards arranged through the National 4-H Service Committee, Chicago.

Up to four medals of honor are offered to deserving boys and girls in each county. The top young leader in each state receives an expense-paid trip to National 4-H Congress in Chicago, Nov. 25-29, and there 12 national winners each receive a $600 educational scholarship.

Through the national 4-H leadership program young people are encouraged to take the opportunity to transform themselves into creative, inspiring, decisive persons. 4-H'ers participating in the program assist in the formation of new clubs, help supervise 4-H activities, aid younger members in their project work and assist members of the Cooperative Extension Service in expanding the 4-H program.

Young people find many outlets for their leadership talents. Improving the environment was the goal of Jim McLean. A 1972 national winner in the 4-H leadership program, McLean organized and was the first president of a county 4-H "Junior Leader Action Club", which received a "Citizenship in Action" grant from Reader's Digest Foundation to help develop a local recreation area. The Brady, Mont., youth also taught conservation classes to nearly 500 youths from ten Montana counties, was chairman of his community's "Earth Day" activities, and served as a junior coordinator at the state's conservation camp.

Teaching crafts to a group of mentally retarded youngsters was one of the 4-H Leadership activities of Susan Webb, of Crossville, Tenn. Miss Webb, also a 1972 national winner in 4-H leadership, was author of a 4-H newsletter for 4-H leaders, school officials and others in her county. In addition, she's conducted numerous workshops, tours and leadership labs.

For more information opportunities in 4-H leadership, contact the county extension office.

Employment of out-of-school youths 16 to 24 years of age rose by about one million to 12.4 million in the year ending in October 1972. The number unemployed, at 1.5 million, was about the same as it was in 1970-71.
