SCC OPEN HOUSE—James Matthews and John Richards, Sandhills Community College landscape gardening students, arrange plants for the holiday open house 5 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the horticulture building on SCC campus. Each year the open house attracts hundreds of public visitors to view the colorful display of flowers and plants grown by students. About six hundred poinsettias in full bloom will be on display. A Christmas tree and seasonal greens will add to the holiday decor. (Alice Baxter Photo) out that we had a fuel crisis, and "in a real sense, it involves the lives, fortunes, and destiny of the country." Since that time many in the Congress, and I must say with only nominal encouragement from the Administration until very recently, have sought to head off this crisis.

Not only must the Administration now give the American people the facts about our energy requirements, production, and resources, but we need to furnish reliable information so that individuals and industry can make plans and not have to grope in the dark. The new Federal Energy Administration must immediately staff offices and work with state and local governments and industry to fairly allocate fuel supplies. I am advised that a few days ago the Atlanta office had more than 5000 applications for fuel allocations with available staff to process only 400 of those applications. Full staffing for regional offices is only now underway.

Time and again during the Senate Government Operations Committee hearings on this legislation, the point was made that no energy program will work unless the American people understand the problem and are assured that they will be fairly treated in sharing shortages.

Simon, the new energy czar, comes into his post with a reputation for his ability to make tough and decisive decisions. He will also need the wisdom of a Solomon to promote the national good as we feel the impact of the energy crisis.

Accent On Agriculture

The problem of adequate supplies of energy now and in the future is obviously of great concern to farmers. American agriculture uses more petroleum products than any other single industry. Farmers consume approximately 3 percent of America's consumption of gasoline and diesel fuel in producing food to feed and fiber to clothe consumers.

Agricultural production requires about 3 percent of the total electricity produced. Nearly 25 percent of the nation's production of liquefied petroleum gas is used on United States farms — about half for production purposes and half for farm home heating and cooking.

Since 1939, United States agricultural fuel consumption has increased nearly fourfold to 8 billion gallons a year. By 1980, we expect our fuel demand to increase 45 percent.

Agriculture can, and will, make internal adjustments to save fuel, but the margin of adjustment is narrow. The solution to the fuel crisis in agriculture is going to have to come mainly from outside agriculture where the overwhelming bulk of the fuel is used — much of it productively, but all too much of it wastefully.

Agriculture is a basic and vital industry; we cannot afford to permit the wastage and conspicuous consumption of fuel throughout our economy to interfere with farm output of food and fiber.

O come, let us adore Him! May the newborn King bless each and everyone at Christmas.
