

POTTERY - A college class meeting at the Indian Museum in Laurinburg studies construction of pottery ware native to the region.

Indian Culture Portrayed At Laurinburg Museum

The Indian Museum of the Carolinas in Laurinburg, will celebrate its third birthday this fall. More than 11,000 persons have signed the guest register since it opened in 1972.

The exhibit area of the T-shaped museum depicts aspects of ancient Indian life in the region - agriculture, hunting, tool-making, sports and medicine. Stone tools and weapons hundreds and thousands of years old are on display. Models, charts and paintings show Carolina Indian life at different periods of time.

come from many places. Nearly a dozen museums across the country, including the Smithsonian Institution, have sent collections. More than 60 contributors have donated or loaned Indian materials for study and display. Materials recovered from excavations conducted by Dr. David A. McLean's classes in American Indian Archaeology at both St. Andrews Presbyterian College and Pembroke State University will be on display eventually.

Museum hours are from 1 - 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 9 - 12 on Tuesday. Admission is free.

Sunday School

Some time ago a wonderful friend and parishioner passed away following many years of struggle against cancer. This woman had been an inspiration to many because of her undaunted faith that conquered both sickness and death.

People with lesser ills and troubles were frequently shamed and lifted by her inspiring witness.

Shortly after her passing, one of her friends confided that he wanted to attend her church so that he could find said that that faith to which she witnessed was dependent upon her own unique personality, yet at the same time it was also true that that native faith was much nurtured by a Christian fellowship. The fellowship was vital to this individual.

BROADCASTER - Hershell Barbour was named general manager of WSHB last week by W.S. Wellons, Sr., president and C.D. Bounds, vice-president. Barbour, the former general manager of WFLB in Fayetteville, has some 16 years experience in the broadcasting field. He attended Campbell College and the University of Maryland.

This is the purpose of a "church" to be the kind of vital fellowship in which faith is planted and nurtured. If it is not this, no group of people, regardless of how organized and authorized, can really be a "church." If it is not a nurturing fellowship, it is not a church.

In the Epistle to the Hebrews the writer admonishes his readers to "hold fast the confession of our hope without wavering..." (10:23). Still, it is easier said than done. It is one thing to tell people to keep their faith, but something else to tell them how.

Thus, the writer of Hebrews goes on to point to one source of help in maintaining their faith: "...let us consider how to stir up one another to love and good works, not neglecting to meet together, as is the habit of some, but encouraging one another..." (10:24,25).
