By-Gone Eras Revisited During Heritage Week

In a return to by-gone days, students and teachers at Hoke High are celebrating Heritage Week and National Library Week.

Most departments have scheduled special activities and displays have been arranged in the library.

Some of the displays include old books, a Fayetteville Observer dated 1852, old coins and paper money, button top shoes, and scale models of a 19th century town and of an Indian burial mound.

A history of Hoke County, prepared by a student, is also on display.

Librarians, observing National Library Week, are dressing like story book characters this week and on Wednesday all the students and teachers will dress in costumes from by-gone eras.

The girls' physical education classes have studied the history of the dance and a Heritage Cookbook was prepared by home economics students.

The clothing classes are studying the dress of the Revolutionary period.

Mrs. Iris Davis, county co-chairman of the Bicentennial Committee, is speaking to student groups during the week.

The special activities will continue throughout the week.

Bloodmobile Visits May 2

Knit-A-Way will sponsor the Bloodmobile visit set for May 2 at the Raeford United Methodist Church, county Red Cross chairman Clyde Upchurch announced.

The Bloodmobile center will be open from noon to 5:30 p.m. for those wishing to give blood.

City Must Appoint New Appeal Board

A new board of appeals to hear protests of condemnation orders must be appointed before the city can order deteriorated buildings torn down.

According to city manager John Gaddy, the terms have expired for two of the original three members of the board.

John W. McPhail, the only member remaining, has agreed to accept a new term, Gaddy said.

Other members were Ivory McNair, now a member of the city zoning board of adjustments, and Sam Morris, now a city councilman.

The appeals board was created several years ago when the city enacted its zoning ordinance. However, the condemnation provisions were not enforced and the board was never used.

A vacancy on the board of adjustments created by the resignation of Ralph Lowe must also be filled, Gaddy said.
