Accordingly, over the years a pattern of district classifications, procedures, legal proceedings and common terminology have emerged which are reasonably uniform across the country. These form the basis of zoning and land management laws in North Carolina. It should be remembered that these laws developed at the demand of the people.

They want their government to assume the responsibility for protecting them not only from those who want to benefit from unscrupulous land uses, but also, in some cases, to protect the people from themselves."

"While meant to secure the welfare of the community, these laws sometimes seem to conflict with another part of our American tradition - the protection of individual liberties."

The concept of land use management, planning, development, etc. has become perhaps the most controversial issue of the current decade. It has been regarded as every thing from "socialism" to "necessary for the survival of the human race" by politicans and laymen alike. The development of a growth management plan is still the formulative stages in North Carolina. Our people are traditionally "land-oriented", social status being determined not by the number of cars owned or the size of the house, but by the number of acres of land belonging to the family. It is the responsibility of our country and local government officials to communicate to our citizens the importance of care and concern if our treasured lands are to be protected from those who would bastardize the fields upon which this agricultural state is so dependent. The following article is an except from a speech delivered by President Waverly Akins to the Harnett County Forum. It is hoped that the land use concept being proposed will stir those officials in other counties who can initiate and carry out their own programs of protective land development.

The Law our common philsophical and mortal heritage and the desire of the people as expressed by their elected and appointed officials, all contain indications of the community's responsibilities in regulating the use of

The Annual meeting of the Flue-cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corporation will be held at the Raleigh Memorial Auditorium on May 30 at 10:00 A.M. Congressman Walter B. Jones, Chairman of the Tobacco Subcommittee of the U.S. House of Representatives, will be the principal speaker. Flue-cured tobacco is most important in North Carolina and most important in North Carolina and producers should keep well informed about the program and should support the activities of this program. Many types of organizations are trying to stop the use of tobacco in our country and you farmers should keep informed about their efforts.

Leaf gall diseases are starting to appear on new leaves of azaleas. can expect to see them on camellias and thododendrons in the next few weeks. These fungi do little damage to the plant. Hand picking affected leaves and destroying the galls by burning or burying are the only suggested control. Oak leaf blisters are appearing on oak trees. The leaf becomes puckered and has a light green or yellow area on the leaf. No control is necessary. Anthracnose is now appearing on leaves of maples, ash, oak, sycamore and walnut. No control is necessary. Needle cast is severe in pines across the state. New needles will come out to replace the old diseased ones. Do not confuse pine beetle damage with the needle cast Make sure you identify your trouble before cutting trees.

Field identification of pests that attack crops is most important to you as You must know this in order to use the right insecticide for control. Soybean specialists have prepared a small pocket size pamphlet on soybean insects. You can take it with you in the field and look at the insects for identification. These are availabe at the County Agents office.

School Collects For Library "The Law says that such regulations must be for the purpose of promoting the health, safety, morals, and general welfare of the people. The promotion of these values is a responsibility of the community."
