BACKYARD BARBECUE
 With warm weather around the corner it's time to get out the new barbecue grill - or to polish up the old one.

But there are other things you need to think about at outdoor cookout time, too - food safety. For serving properly handled food is important.

When should you buy your ground beef? Preferably, a day or two before the party - no sooner. Unless of course, you plan to freeze the meat for a short period to preserve its freshness.

If hamburger is to be thawed first you should do it from freezer to refrigerator to prevent the growth of bacteria. Don't allow hamburger to be unrefrigerated for more than an hour at the most.

Cleanliness in preparing food is always important, but especially with hamburgers. Wash your hands with soap and hot water - before - and after - handling the raw meat. Don't even handle the meat if you have cuts or sores on your hands.

Having coleslaw? Keep it chilled - bring out in small batches to refill the bowl. Coleslaw should never sit in warm temperatures. Even baked beans should not be allowed to set at more than two hours in room temperatures. Keep in mind that food borne illness can cause diarrhea, vomiting, stomach cramps and other unpleasant symptoms that can last for several hours or even days.

So to keep food safe - keep perishable foods cold - that is, below 40 degrees. Then keep cooked meat, seafood and poultry hot - that is above 140 degrees.

Make the barbecue habit a safe one.
