

Farm Items

By W. S. Young County Agricultural Agent

Soybean producers who have gotten in trouble with some of the hard-to-kill weeds now have another tool to help them. Dyanap has been cleared in North Carolina for over the top use. This will control cocklebur, morning glory and many other tough weeds. Apply two to four quarts of material in eight to ten gallons of water at the broadcast rate. For serial application two to four quarts in a minimum of five gallons of water is recommended. Application should not be made to wet soybean foliage.

The over the top application should only be made when there is no other control method possible.

People who are interested in seeing a project of this nature established are invited to attend and express themselves.

The farming season is in full operation at this time and machinery is used the most. It is a time that farm people get hurt by using machinery. Here are some tips to make your farm safe: Keep guards and shields in place; make certain hydraulic lines, hitches and other things are secure; shut off power and be sure parts have stopped unclugging, servicing, or adjusting a machine; watch your step when climbing on or off a machine and wear appropriate personal protective equipment.

When transporting farm machinery on public roads, be sure you can see and be seen and drive with care. Keep slow-moving vehicle emblems clean and replace them when they fade or are damaged.

The area soil conservationist and the manager of the Lumbree River Council of Governments are asking the rural development panels in the four county area cooperate with them and assist in investigating the possibility of getting qualified for Resource Conservation and Development funds. This subject will be discussed at a meeting beginning at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, June 18,

Clean-Up Man Takes His 'Job' Seriously

Every day, either in the morning or evening, elderly Gorell Kiger leaves his house and crosses busy Fayetteville Road to go to the waste container and pick up other people's trash off the ground and put it in the container.

"This is the best looking container in the county", Sanitarian M.R. Mills said.

"It's that way all the time. He keeps it like that".

Kiger, who walks with a cane, lives with his wife Elsie in a neat home near the Moose Lodge on Business 401. One of the county's solid waste containers for residential use is located directly across the highway, and a while ago Kiger decided to appoint himself 'in charge of clean-up' official.

"I just don't like seeing it piled up out here", Kiger said quietly. "Some people will just throw stuff out, and if it can go in, I'll put it in".

"Some people are very nice, but some of them just look like they're trying to make a mess", he said.

Kiger keeps a special eye out for large boxes thrown into the container.

"I try to break down the cardboard, if I can, because if someone puts one in, there's no room for anything else".

Mills visited the container Friday and declared if there were more people like Kiger in the county, there wouldn't be as many problems with the container system.

"You know, people who have their own containers, a free place for their garbage, will call me up and complain there's garbage lying around. Well, they could have picked it up themselves if they wanted to", Mills said.

"If we had more community spirit like you", Mills said to Kiger, "we could have some fine cooperation with this system".

Kiger bent down to snatch a piece of paper the wind tossed and dropped it into the container.

A bank loan to a leasee at the city airport for the purchase of an airplane was co-signed by a member of the airport committee. William Poole said he co-signed the loan to enable Paul Rose, owner of Rose Aviation, to buy a twin-engine aircraft. The loan is the only financial arrangement he has had with Rose, Poole said. "I agreed to co-sign the loan," Poole said. "I didn't think anything of it as far as the airport committee goes."
