WHY BLANCH VEGETABLES?

There's one step in the freezing of vegetables that some homemakers think they can ignore. And that step is blanching.

But blanching -- this is, the scalding of vegetables in hot water or steam before you put them into the package -- is a must.

Here's why. Blanching inactivates most of the plant enzymes that might otherwise cause toughness, change in color, mustiness, loss of flavor, softening and loss in nutritive value.

And -- blanching vegetables before freezing reduces the number of micro-organisms in the food.

Also, blanching can enhance the green color of vegetables -- including peas, broccoli and spinach -- giving them a fresh - from - the garden look.

It also wilts leafy vegetables -- such as spinach and other greens -- making them easier to pack in the freezer container.

In addition, blanching displaces air that is trapped in the tissues of vegetables -- and it saves and reserves the flavor of fresh vegetables.

Chason Reunion Set

The annual Chason family reunion will be held Sunday, July 13 at Waldo's Beach.

A picnic lunch will begin at 1 P.M. Friends and relatives are invited.

So, if you're thinking about saving a step -- and not blanching your vegetables -- reconsider. And blanch.
