F.O. Clark,
District Conservationist

A third printing of the Soil Conservation Service book, "Guide for Sediment Control on Construction Sites in North Carolina," is off the press and being distributed in the state. State Conservationist Jesse L. Hicks said.

The book was prepared in 1973 by the SCS State Office in Raleigh, and a second printing was needed in 1974. The latest printing was done by the State of North Carolina, using the SCS plates, to meet continued demand.

Following enactment of North Carolina's recent sedimentation control law, the book has been widely used by municipal, county and state officials for technical assistance on sediment control. "We are glad that it has been so well received by those using it," Jesse Hicks commented, and "glad that we had the know-how to prepare this book when it was needed."

The 220-page guide is illustrated with drawings and photos showing correct techniques, together with language explaining sediment control methods. It has been used as a manual by many units of government.

Contents of the book have remained unchanged through the three printings. "Of course, technical assistance on sediment control is also available in each of the North Carolina's hundred counties from Soil Conservation Service people, and through local soil and water conservation districts," the state conservationist added.

New Ruling
Allows Safety
Cap Choice

Medicines in sugar bowls? Teacups? Mustard jars? Don't laugh. A lot of makeshift drug containers are turning up these days due to a law which enforces the use of hard-to-open, child-resistant safety closures.

The noble intentions of the 1970 Safety Packaging Act have become ineffective and even dangerous! In addition, drug potency is diminished in many cases by its exposure to light, heat and moisture. But now, a new ruling by the Consumer Product Safety Commission should help. Effective immediately, the CPSC has given the druggist the "green light" to dispense all your future drugs in easily-opened, conventional packaging when instructed by your single, simple "blanket request" to do so. So, now you have a choice of drug containers - safety or regular.

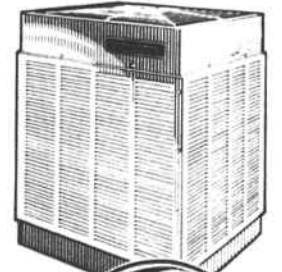

Walter
and Mike

If you still have young children, however, we firmly suggest continued use of the safer, child-proof containers. In the end, safety from accidental child poisonings rests in your hands.

INSTALL General Electric's WEATHERTRON HEAT PUMP

The same high-efficiency unit that heats your home in winter without oil or gas... air conditions your home in summer too!

By installing a Weathertron Heat Pump to new, or present air conditioning duct-work you can forget about most fuel cutbacks or shortages—just turn it on and forget it with the automatic thermostat. The heat pump switches from heating to cooling—and from cooling to heating all by itself! Easy to install in existing homes where there is a satisfactory duct system. And operating costs are remarkably low because GE's Weathertron uses electricity more efficiently than ordinary forms of electric resistance heating!
