SCS Activities

F.O. Clark,
District Conservationist

Field borders, sometimes called "filter strips," are making sharp gains in North Carolina, particularly in the agricultural areas of the coastal plain and Piedmont, State Conservationist Jesse L. Hicks of the Soil Conservation Service said.

Field borders are grassy areas, 10 to 20 feet wide, which have long been used on the edge of cultivated fields to reduce erosion, but Hicks pointed out that farmers now appreciate their value for filtering out sediment, controlling pesticide wash, and nutrient loss.

Some landowners once disked the edges of fields to control weeds, but now most are using the grass "filter strip" for the same purpose.

Field borders have the added advantage of providing a solid stretch of earth where tractors, combines and other equipment can be treated around after completing one pass across the field.

Jesse Hicks made the point that soil and water conservation measures are often the identical recommendation for control of water pollution, a continuing objective of the Soil Conservation Service during more than four decades of service.

"Farmers want to take care of their land - after all, they have the greatest stake in protecting this vital asset. They not only accept recommendations, but will spend money to accomplish this," he commented.

The State Conservationist emphasized that "sound soil and water conservation measures, such as the field borders so many farmers are installing, are the best tools to control many types of pollution. I'm glad that the Soil Conservation Service, together with local soil and water conservation districts, can help. It's an essential program."

Farm Items

W. S. Young & Freddie O'Neal
County Agricultural Agents

The N.C. State Fair will be held this year from October 17 - 25. Again people are being encouraged to enter all types of things in the fair. Premiums are good in most categories. A display of turf that is used throughout the state will be the feature attraction this year. This should create interest in Hoke County since we have a commercial turf farm. Turkey products are also sent for display by the House of Raeford. Individuals and especially young people are encouraged to make entries. Information is available from the county agent's office.

Many questions have been asked about producing a fall crop of Irish potatoes in the home garden. The following information applies: Immediately after harvest, Irish potato tubers have a rest period or a dormant period, during which they will not sprout even though placed under favorable conditions for sprouting. Chemical seed treatments have been used to try to break the dormancy, but with poor results. A commercial grower said he had one successful fall crop in twenty years of trying.

Tennis

Hostetlers Win Singles

Henry Hostetler defeated John Miller 6-2, 6-1 to win the men's singles event in the 1975 tennis tournament sponsored by the county recreation commission last week.

Hostetler had defeated Larry Beasley and Miller had beaten Glenn Miller to reach the finals.

In doubles action, Larry Beasley and Glenn Miller downed John Miller and Terry McInnis 6-3, 6-4.

Women's finals took place Friday with Anne Hostetler defeating Mary Topp 6-1, 6-0.

The tournament champions received trophies for their efforts.

SINGLES CHAMP-Henry Hostetler is the men's singles champion of the 1975 Raeford Invitation Tennis Tournament.

SINGLES CHAMP-Anne Hostetler captured first place in the women's singles division of the Raeford tennis tournament.

DOUBLES KING-Glenn Miller became co-champion of the men's doubles title in tennis here. (Partner Larry Beasley not pictured.)

RUNNER-UP-Mary Topp was named runner-up for the women's singles title Thursday night in the tennis tournament.

Wildlife Afield

The future for the wild turkey in North Carolina is looking a lot brighter these days, but it's no accident. It's taken a lot of hard work and a good bit of money.

For the past several years, the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission has been in the midst of a rather ambitious program to restore wild turkeys to many parts of the state where they have been extinct for many years. Turkey biologist Wayne Bailey has been in charge of the field work, having come to North Carolina from West Virginia where he was successful in a similar restoration program.

Basically, the project consists of live - trapping wild turkeys from parts of the state where they are relatively numerous and restocking them in other places where they are extinct or where only small, remnant populations exist.

Much of the restocking has taken place in western parts of the state. Back at the turn of the century after most of the good turkey habitat had been logged, the turkey populations were virtually eliminated. But in the intervening years, the mountains have been reforested, and are now capable of supporting turkeys again. Already, several areas have been successfully restocked.

Encouraged by this success, the Commission plans to intensify its turkey restoration program during 1975-76. Three, and possibly four, Game Lands crews are to be trained in the techniques of turkey live - trapping. This will make it possible to live - trap turkeys from several areas at the same time.

Current plans call for restocking projects on three more western areas which do not now have turkey populations. One is the Dysartsville Game Land. Two other areas may include the upper Catawba River Basin and on Big Ivy (both parts of the huge Pisgah Game Land).

The turkey restoration program is being paid for and supported by hunters across North Carolina from license fees, and as such, it's a good example of how regulated hunting has brought many fish and game species from endangered status to relative abundance.

Indeed, kill reports are also used to help determine turkey populations and dictate the kinds of management and regulations which are necessary.

Commission reports indicate that Tarheel turkey hunters have cooperated very well with the Legislative enactment, effective in 1975, requiring successful hunters to report their kills to check stations or Wildlife Cooperator agents. Slightly over 100 kill reports were received for the seasons which closed this past spring. Eighteen wild turkeys were reported harvested in the Coastal Plains counties, while 75 were reported in the Piedmont counties (where present turkey populations are highest.) Eight kills were reported in mountain counties. Investigations by the Division of Game personnel indicate that the reporting level was good, meaning that the vast majority of hunters appear to have complied with the new law.

It is, of course, far too early to suggest that someday turkeys will be as common in the state as other popular and heavily managed game species such as deer, but the outlook for at least moderate success seems promising.

Already, there are wild turkeys strutting in parts of the state for the first time in over 50 years, and that trend should continue.

Good weather this past spring held promise for a good "hatch" and this may speed things up. Persistent rains in May and June during 1973 and 1974 slowed the restoration efforts somewhat, but with a good spring behind us - and hopefully more ahead - the proud turkey's future looks good.

That's good news for those who care about the bird that many feel should rightfully have become this nation's symbol rather than the bald eagle.
