Wildlife Afield

BY JIM DEAN

"All right, watch that one," hissed Tom Cooper as we squatted in the brush along the edge of a big corn field at the Roy Womble Game Land in western Wake County.

At the far end of the field, a dove took a quick circle to gain speed and altitude, then came down the middle of the field like a Saturn rocket with the hiccups.

A rattle of musketry swept down the field, following the general path of the dove. Tom was counting.

"One, two...three, four, five..." Brer dove, he kept on a - flying. "Nineteen, twenty, twenty - one ... twenty - two. The dove entered the trees on the other side of the field -- untouched.

We snickered. Of course, it was safe for us to snicker. The dove had been beyond our range which means we were not afforded a decent opportunity to add four more misses to the total.

"Let's see now," said Tom, adding up some figures in his head. "Twenty-two shots at 15 cents a shell comes to $3.30, give or take a few cents for the price spread."

"If an adult dove weighs as much as four ounces, that would mean that the price of meat is $13.20 a pound," figured Tom.

"Yeah, but you're overlooking the fact that the quarter of a pound of meat involved is sitting in yon pine," I pointed out. "Which means that your prices are not for meat in the pan, but meat on the wing."

"You're right," agreed Tom. "That throws a different light on it."

"Furthermore," I said, "if the target should happen to be a young dove weighing only a couple or three ounces, the price of meat on the wing could rise to at least $26 per pound, or more if you consider other expenses."

All of this is futile, of course, because I've never known a dove hunter who quibbled over the relative cost of the sport. We might be outraged at the price of a steak, but steak is a luxury. Dove hunting, on the other hand, is a necessity.

Back in the office the day after Labor Day, I talked with fellow dove hunters who had tried their luck here and there, and while some enjoyed excellent shoots, others found few birds.

"Quite frankly, I was surprised," said one. "I have been seeing a lot of doves across the state the past few weeks, but our shooting was only fair."

Those biologists I have talked with indicated that shooting on the Wildlife Commission's Game Lands' dove fields across the state ranged from very good to just fair. I would have to rate the Womble Game Land as only fair this year, but this was probably because weather conditions forced the cutting of the corn there somewhat earlier than expected.

The best educated guesses at this point, however, are that the shooting will hold up and perhaps even improve during the next week or so for several reasons.

For one thing, the total population of doves (somewhere around 500 million) east of the Mississippi is estimated to be up about 10 percent this year, and North Carolina should be getting more of those migrants as soon as the more northerly states have a cold snap.

Also, there is a tendency among serious dove hunters to do more scouting around if the opening day hunt is not overly successful. In many cases, it's possible to line up better areas for the second and third hunts of the year.

Besides, who can pass up a bargain on meat at a mere $26 a pound?

Food Sales

Hit $5,574,000

NEW YORK, July 12 - Retail business in Hoke County was at a higher level in the past year than was expected, the final tabulations show.

The sales volume compiled by local stores indicates that local residents have been coping with the recession more successfully than have people in many parts of the country.

However, although a sizeable amount was spent locally for food, clothing, home furnishings and other goods and services, buying was at a more restrained pace than it would have been if economic conditions had been normal.

As in other communities, people cut back temporarily on some of their discretionary spending. Most severely hit, as a result, were the markets for automobiles and new homes.

The facts and figures on the local spending picture are brought out in the annual survey of markets, conducted by the Standard Rate and Data Service. It shows how consumers in each area of the nation spent their money, and for what.

In Hoke County, a large portion of it went for food. Approximately 28 cents out of every dollar spent in retail stores was for such purchases.

By comparison, elsewhere in the United States, 22 cents was for food and, in the State of North Carolina, 23 cents.

What it produced, for supermarkets, grocery stores, meat markets, bakeries and other food outlets was a sales volume of $5,574,000. This compares with the previous year's $5,189,000.

Not included is the amount spent for food consumed in restaurants and in other eating and drinking places.

If the expenditure for take-home food were uniformly divided among the local population it would be equivalent to $1,333 per household.

The volume of business done by other retail establishments shows that most of them stood up quite well, despite the recession.

Sales of cars and other automotive equipment and supplies amounted to $2,550,000, compared with the prior year's $3,000,000.

General merchandise stores recorded a total of $1,012,000 in the year. In 1973 it was $1,000,000.
