Library News

'Talking Books' Here

by Mrs. Jay Williams

...A talking book machine and a talking book highlight the current display at the Hoke County Public Library. Anyone who has never seen either is welcome to come in and see them in operation.

Basically, a simple - to - operate Manual record player and voice recordings done at very slow speed so that a large book may be presented on as few discs as possible, this combination has brought joy to thousands of people who are either blind or physically handicapped and unable to hold a book.

Books, both bestsellers and classics, fiction and non-fiction, magazines and other materials on varied subjects are recorded by actors and actresses of note. Listening to the recordings brings the books alive to people who would otherwise miss the pleasure of reading.

Individuals wishing to obtain a talking book may inform Mrs. Lee Cameron, Hoke County library supervisor, who will send their application on to the North Carolina Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped in Raleigh.

No fee is charged for any part of the service. Postage is free, and a return label for mailing materials back to Raleigh is provided. The talking book machine at the library has a disc introducing patrons to the service and another that tells how to operate the machine. Instructions for operation are also included in Braille. These measures insure ease of operation by those who are unsighted.

The talking book included in the library's exhibit is "Northwest Passage", by Kenneth Roberts. The book has been termed "a shrewd and fresh approach to pre - Revolutionary American history."

Other services from the North Carolina Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped include large print books in 18-point type and talking book cassette tapes and tape players. A large print newsletter is published by - monthly except for summer; it also comes out in Braille and on cassette tape. Catalogs of talking books available are also presented on discs, tape, and in large print.

The Hoke County Library subscribes to large print editions of Guideposts and Reader's Digest. A copy of each has been included in the talking book display. Also included are several pamphlets on hiring the handicapped. One, "How to Get a Job, a Handy Guide to Job Seekers," was published by the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped. It would be useful to anyone currently out of a job and wishing some pointers on how to apply.

Employers either wishing to or hesitating to hire handicapped people may be perhaps reassured by some of the other pamphlets in the display. A pamphlet on people with multiple sclerosis lists the accomplishments of fifty individuals, some confined to wheelchairs, who have risen above the afflictions of their disease to remain active and productive employees and members of society.

Also included in this Hoke County public library display is a card presenting the raised letters of the Braille alphabet for the blind and a book, "Talk to the Deaf," by Lottie Rickenhof. The book explains the manual alphabet for the deaf and shows some of the hand signs which are used to communicate various ideas and words.

The talking book machine, the talking book and the pamphlets were obtained through the Outreach Project, Sandhill Regional Library System. Mrs. Hoke Currie is the Outreach Librarian, Mrs. Jay Williams, Hoke county consultant, assists her in Hoke county.

Blood Need 'Urgent'

Red Cross officials are making an urgent appeal for blood at this Friday's visit of the Bloodmobile to help boost the county's rapidly dwindling fund.

Clyde Upchurch, county Red Cross chairman, said the county has used 268 pints more than has been collected in the period July 1, 1974 through Oct. 21, according to the Charlotte Red Cross office.

Large amounts of blood were needed in August and September and poor turnouts at recent Bloodmobile visits combined to decrease the county's total, Upchurch said.

The Bloodmobile will be in Raeford at the Methodist Church from noon to 5 P.M. Friday and anyone able to donate blood is asked to help.

Refreshments will be served by volunteers and there is space available for donors to rest before returning to their jobs.
