The Land Utilization Survey is the most comprehensive annual survey of its kind conducted in North Carolina. Information collected is vital to all segments of agriculture, agri-business, related industries and land use planners. The survey is conducted in January each year. All landowners of tracts of ten or more acres are urged to cooperate by accurately reporting their 1975 land-use crop acreage and livestock inventories. Landowners can get a copy, from the county agents office, to list the various crops and livestock grown before going to the township lists. This will help to speed up the process and will give you a chance to get your acreage down correctly.

This is the season that farmers begin to kill hogs for their own use. Some tips will be helpful in saving all of the meat if you don't put it under refrigeration. First, chill the carcass properly right after killing the hog. Cut the carcass after it is chilled or after all the heat is out of the body. Put in cure when the meat is cut. Use the right amount of curing mix and follow a curing schedule. Cure during November, December and January and avoid high temperature while curing. Let the salt equalize before smoking. Keep temperature below 90 degrees F. while smoking. Do not put hams in airtight bags. Age for about six months and protect your meat from insects and rodents during this time. Exact details can be obtained from a bulletin entitled "Curing Hams Country Style" at the County's Agents' office.

SCS News

F. O. Clark, District Conservationist

Paul A. Vander Myde, Deputy Assistant of Agriculture for Conservation, Research and Education, has voiced genuine concern over "dredge and fill" regulations of the Army Corps of Engineers because of possible effects on farmland.

Commenting on Section 104 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, he said that "a bad decision can cost farmers dearly...they have a $500 billion investment to protect...and it can slash deeply into food output."

Speaking before the South Carolina Association of Conservation Districts at its Columbia meeting, Vander Myde said that "interim rules" laid down by the Army Corps of Engineers is an example of the lack of understanding of modern farming by "urban power-holders."

"It's not that non-farm groups are unsympathetic to farmers. Survey after survey indicates that ranchers and farmers have an excellent image. They are looked upon as fine, honest, hard-working-people that most urbanites would like to live next door to. But...these urban power-holders cannot begin to understand the short term and long-term implications of their decisions upon today's vastly complex and costly farm business operations."

The agricultural official continued: "As Assistant Secretary Long said the other day, we believe they COULD force ranchers and farmers to apply to the military for a permit every time they: build a pond, improve a stream bank, construct a sod waterway, build a diversion ditch, construct a terrace outlet, or carry out any other water management practice that involves moving dirt."

He said: "This amounts to a paper pusher's paradise, despite the fact that these practices, mostly designed by Soil Conservation Service professionals are the results of research and are aimed at accomplishing the same goals the Corps and EPA seek. "The Corps says that it has no such intentions-that normal farming activities are excluded. But the language of the Act is such that any district engineer of the Corps COULD require permits for many of these practices and others. We must persuade the Corps to change this regulatory language to specifically exclude from permit regulation of all these operations."

The official pointed out that the stated objective of Public Law 92-500, the "Clean Water Act," is to "restore and maintain the chemical, physical and biological integrity of the nation's waters. This is an objective that has the support of USDA and all the rest of us."

While final regulations have not yet been issued, and while the interim final regulations will have less adverse impact on agricultural and the rural sector than the May 6, 1975, regulations, they continue to be complex and ambiguous, the agricultural spokesman said.

He urged the Corps of Engineers and EPA to modify and clarify the final regulations. "The installation of soil and water conservation practices on land areas included an 'navigable waters,' may require a permit," he continued. "This is particularly distressing because, conservation measures contribute to water quality improvement through the control of sediment movement."

New Cards Jan. 2

In the process of hurry, hurry: trying to move our operation forward, we have taken a few minutes a day to enjoy the nice goodies some of you have brought for our staff. It was very thoughtful and time consuming this busy time of the year. Thank you.

Mrs. Cameron spent Wed., Dec. 17 in Rockingham at a meeting on Regional procedure. There will be continued meetings on this project for the next several weeks.

MAKE PLANS NOW to re-register at the library, starting Jan. 2. We ask all our patrons to bear with us with this change to a charge plate type of registration - (There will be no charge), just this type of library card which you will HAVE TO HAVE with you to check out a book. Each person will use the number on his or her card to check out books instead of your name. It may be hard to adjust to this system, so we ask you to start telling yourself even before you register, "I MUST not lose my library card and I MUST be sure to have it with me to check out a book." Also beginning Jan 2 books will be issued for only two weeks at a time. You may renew your books only if there is no waiting list. All books, new or old, will be issued for the same time limit. Fines on all overdue books will be two cents (2c) a day.

Prison Has Christmas

Inmates at the McCain prison unit will enjoy a traditional Christmas dinner of turkey and all of the trimmings and also receive a fruit basket on Christmas, capping off a month of activities held to brighten the holiday for the prisoners.

Bingo parties, sponsored by the prison Jaycee chapter, were held for all wards beginning the first week of December and the games were "rigged" to assure every man at least one prize, spokesman Walter DeLong said.

Several womens' groups from the Southern Pines and Aberdeen area contributed food for parties and the current Miss Southern Pines, Margaret Leatherman, visited the inmates and entertained at a party where each man received a Christmas present.

Free movies, sponsored by the Jaycees, were shown during the month, and a group of Pine Bluff youths sang Christmas carols last weekend.

Hoke County 4-H members traveled to the prison Saturday and provided music for the worship service. The members also brought refreshments for the get-together.
