You Can Cut Fuel Cost

By Willie Featherstone, Jr.,
Ass't Agricultural Agent

To find out where a home is wasting energy and fuel, government and industry energy conservation experts advise home owners to check their house from top to bottom -- attic to basement -- for money saving opportunities.

Things to check for are: Proper attic insulation; caulking and weatherstripping around doors and windows, wall insulation; basement wall insulation, storm doors and windows; and properly maintained heating and cooling units.

FIRST STOP: The attic -- When checking the attic one should look for insulation on the attic floor, between the joists. If your house was built within the last 15 years you should find six or more inches of insulation.

SECOND STOP: Interior living space -- Is the door tightly sealed around all four edges? To find out, light a candle and hold it near where the doors meet the frame, then hold it near the outside of the frame itself. If the candle flickers, you are wasting fuel. You should perform tests on all doors and windows between heated and unheated spaces. If the candle flickers, your doors need weather stripping and the door and window frames need exterior caulking.

Sticker Deadline Feb. 16

Edward L. Powell, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, urged North Carolina motorists who have not obtained their 1976 license plate validation stickers or license plates to do so before the February 16 deadline.

The Commissioner also reminded owners of private automobiles that this year they keep their 1975 license plates and must purchase a validation sticker to update it. The sticker must be placed in the upper right-hand corner of the license plate by law.

Powell said, "This year the deadline for displaying 1976 validation stickers and license plates has been extended to midnight, February 16 because the 15th falls on a Sunday. Since there is no legal authority to extend the deadline further, we urge all motorists to purchase their stickers or plates as soon as possible. The first four weeks of this registration renewal period indicate that less than one-third (1/3) of all North Carolina vehicle registrations have been renewed. By obtaining the license tag stickers and plates early, the inconvenience of waiting in long lines at the last minute will be avoided."

Powell reminds motorists that there are 102 branch offices across North Carolina.

The Raeford office is located on W. Edinborough Ave. Hours are 9-5 Monday thru Friday.

Enrollment High For Winter Term

More than eight hundred men and women enrolled in general adult education courses for the winter term at Sandhills Community College, according to Harlan McCaskill. The number does not include the adults who are studying elementary grades or working for high school diplomas in the adult basic education program. McCaskill said.

The general courses for adults include practical courses such as bookkeeping, typing, business machines, real estate and other job-related subjects; cultural courses in creative writing, pottery making, painting and other arts; and courses such as sewing, knitting, tailoring, upholstery and so on.

Sandhills College provides such courses in morning, afternoon and evening classes in general adult education on campus, in several areas in Moore County and in the Raeford area.

According to D. L. Furches, coordinator of the general adult education program, the enrollment will no doubt be more than one thousand men and women for the winter term when registration is completed. Several courses will not begin class sessions until next month, Furches explained, and persons still may enroll. With the exception of bridge, the fee for each course is $3 for the entire term.

Local soil and water conservation districts--which serve each North Carolina county--and the technical expertise of the Soil Conservation Service, an agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, are solidly behind local government in working to curb erosion and sediment. These agencies will take on no "police" duties but rather confine themselves to technical assistance to local and state government. They are contributing invaluable knowledge that helps make the program workable.

Only a few months ago a four-way memorandum of understanding to work toward erosion control was signed by State Conservationist Jesse L. Hicks for the Soil Conservation Service, Secretary James Harrington for the North Carolina Department of Natural and Economic Resources, Chairman Joe Phillips for the North Carolina Sedimentation Control Commission, and Chairman Carl Sloop for the North Carolina Soil and Water Conservation Commission, which works closely with the 92 local districts.

Each official pledged mutual support to the erosion control programs.

Assistance Available
Expert technical assistance in development of effective erosion control plans for individual sites is available without cost to landusers from the local conservation districts, with Soil Conservation Service technical assistance to back them up. Why control sediment? Many damages result from uncontrolled erosion. Mud, silt and loose soil resulting from land disturbing activities quickly move downhill through erosion and enter natural watercourses. The sediment "robs" streams of capacity. It blocks culverts, causing flooding. It creates poor drainage conditions, which sometimes means disaster to homes and other buildings in low-lying areas.

Septic tanks may become inoperable. Building foundations can be damaged. In addition, sedimentation carries chemical-oil, fertilizers, herbicides, and other pollutants can be carried into streams, resulting in excessive growth of algae, foul odors and other problems--the "reverse" of the the traditional clear-flowing stream.

A year ago, only a few conservation groups were concerned about erosion and sediment damage. But today it's becoming clear that pollution is everybody's business--and more and more people in all walks of life want to protect their natural resources. Solutions are available, and the answer is evident: close cooperation between land developers, soil and water conservation districts, and local and state government. Working together, these can do the job.
