BY HOKE COUNTY AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION AGENTS

Growers are considering planting more corn in 1976. Last year the European Corn Borer gave several growers some bad trouble. Insect pests attack the plant throughout the growing season and often over winter in the field. A total management program should be followed.

Most important is thorough crop residue destruction that is buried deep. Second, rotation is the farmer's best tool for overall pest control. Third, soil insecticides in the spring can control the first generation. Use of Furadan, Thimet or Counter, according to the insect problem can reduce these pests of corn.

must be followed exactly as they are stated on the labels.

Hoke County farmers and some retired persons are continually looking for something to supplement their income. Several are looking at growing different crops in some newly constructed greenhouses. One is considering growing flower plants for sale and also plants to use in making hanging baskets. Another is planting tomato plants to have tomatoes on the market before they begin to come out of the fields in the spring. All of these efforts require much labor and many exact management practices, but can give a good return to the grower.

Some information has just been released on last year's data for foliar fungicides in soybean fields. The tests were done in Northampton County. Materials used included Benlate, Kocide, Copper and Mertek 340F. Most of these materials gave some increase over the check plots. Benlate and the mertek compounds gave the best yields. Various rates were used to find the exact amount that gave the highest yields. Recommendations

Heilig-Meyers Opts For New Center

Heilig-Meyers Company announced the purchase of a 103,440 square foot building on an 11.4 acre site in Statesville, N.C., which will be used as a major distribution warehouse for 26 of its retail furniture stores.

According to Hyman Meyers, president, the Richmond based furniture chain plans to immediately install a rail siding and make other minor changes in the building to facilitate the shipment of merchandise to its stores in North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia.
