Series Begins Mar. 4

During March the Sandhill Regional Library System, the Hoke County Bicentennial Commission and the Woman's Club of Raeford are sponsoring a series of five weekly programs, which will be held in Raeford. The overall title of this series is "The Good Old Days: Then or Now?" The programs are funded by the North Carolina Humanities Committee and each will feature a speaker from a North Carolina college or university. There will also be a panel of local people who are interested or experienced in the discussion area. Panel members and the audience will have the opportunity to question the speakers or comment on their remarks.

THE GOOD OLD DAYS: THEN OR NOW?

Hoke County, N.C. March 4, 11, 16, 23 and 30.

The advance of technology in the twentieth century has affected every aspect of community life in North Carolina. Technology, in this context, encompasses all the know-how, the methods and the techniques that have come to influence human activity. Technological advances have established a new way of life in North Carolina and throughout the world. It is the design of this project to bring the old and the new ways of life into juxtaposition to see what one says to the other.

A NEW KIND OF SOCIETY

Although the rural communities in North Carolina are slower to change than those in some areas, the community, as it was once known, no longer exists. There is a great awareness of the "larger society," and the local community is affected and changed by influences outside of the immediate community. We have today the highest standards of living ever attained but also the highest degrees of alienation, violence and anxiety.

Speaker: Dr. Waldo Beach, Duke University

A NEW KIND OF WORK

The machine has taken over and the worker must look elsewhere for the satisfaction he once derived from his own creative ability. The working hours are shorter. Job education is changing.

Speaker: Dr. John Young, Davidson College

A NEW KIND OF LEISURE

A new kind of leisure has moved in to take up the free time produced by technological advancement. Where, for example, pleasure was once found in family and group relationships, today pleasure is distributed en masse through television.

Speaker: Dr. Janice Hardison Faulkner, East Carolina University

A NEW KIND OF WORSHIP

In attempting to identify itself with the twentieth century, the church has produced a new kind of worship, characterized by changes in the liturgy of both Protestant and Catholic churches. The relevance of the institutional church for modern man is being questioned.

Speaker: Dr. Michael D. McDaniel, Lenoir Rhyne College

These are suggested areas which each topic might cover. The speaker may elect to narrow or broaden the specific area on which he will speak.

Background

Amendment Number One:

Revenue Bonds

Constitutional Amendment #1, if approved by the voters, will permit the State of North Carolina to sell revenue bonds to finance hospital improvement and modernization projects.

No taxes are involved in this amendment, and there will be no tax increase if this amendment is approved and bonds are subsequently sold.

Passage of this amendment will help to hold down hospital costs by enabling lower interest, tax free, revenue bonds to be used to finance the construction of hospitals or building additions to replace obsolete facilities; constructing hospital-owned doctors offices and clinics; and building or modernizing laboratories and other hospital facilities.

Revenue bonds save money because they result in lower interest costs than conventional financing. By using revenue bonds, hospitals will save between 20 percent to 30 percent in interest costs. Any savings in interest costs can then be passed on to patients in the form of lower hospital charges than would otherwise be possible.

Investors who buy revenue bonds do not pay state or federal income taxes on interest earned on their investment; therefore, the investor is willing to earn a lower rate of interest. This lower rate of interest is a form of saving to hospitals using revenue bonds.

To illustrate how tax free revenue bond financing compares to conventional, taxable financing, examine the total cost for borrowing $15 million to build a typical new hospital. A total of $41,313,000 will be repaid if the project is financed with a conventional loan; but a total of $35,129,250 will be repaid if financed with revenue bonds, a savings which amounts to $6,183,750. Lower interest means lower hospital costs and lower charges to the patients than would otherwise be possible.

All public (city and county) hospitals, and community non-profit hospitals, including church affiliated hospitals and some state hospitals, will be able to use revenue bonds to finance improvement projects.

Although some hospitals have recently undergone capital improvement projects and don't need revenue bond financing now, sometime in the future these hospitals may have to make costly additions or undertake modernization projects to upgrade and improve health care services. Revenue bonds will be available to finance future construction or modernization projects.

Hospitals requesting permission to utilize revenue bonds will be
