STORE BRANDS
You can save money on food bills by purchasing store brands. For many supermarkets have products packed especially for them.

These items may be identical to name brands—in quality, appearance and nutritional value. But the store brands often are less expensive than famous name brands.

Sometimes, store brand foods are packed by the processors of name brand items. But they are sold under different labels.

These store brands may be less expensive because they don't have national advertising costs. And a grocery chain can buy items in volume—then pass the savings on to their customers.

So why not experiment with different store brands? Compare their price and quality with those of nationally advertised products. You might save yourself some money in the long run.

APPLE TIME
Just about ANYTIME is a good time to fit apples into family meals. After all, apples are nutritious and easy to pack for a bag lunch. And they make a delicious, crunchy addition to many salads.

And right now—when brisk weather makes our thoughts turn to spicy and warm treats—apples can be the perfect starting point for making pies, cookies and applesauce cake.

When you shop for apples, you'll find there are many varieties to choose from. And they differ widely in appearance, color, fresh characteristics, seasonal availability and use.

That means you'll do well to choose an apple by the way you plan to use it.

For eating out-of-hand or other fresh uses, look for Red and Golden Delicious, Jonathan, McIntosh, Stayman or Winesap.

Of if you want a tart or slightly acid variety for pies and applesauce — your best apple choices may be Gravenstein, Jonathan, Grimes Golden, Yellow Transparent or Newton.

Baked apples call for a firmer-fleshed variety of apple. Northern Spy, Rome Beauty, Winesap, York Imperial or Rhode Island Greening are excellent for baking.

Here's a final tip. buy only the amount of fruit that you can use or store without waste. Keep in mind that apples can be kept in the refrigerator a week or longer with little loss of quality.
