It is a good thing to say nothing when you have nothing to say.

Series Of Symposiums Focus On 'Food Day'

Food Day, April 8, 1976 will serve as the focal point for community action and education on crucial food and nutritional issues and will also be the first day of a two-day symposium at Fayetteville State University entitled "World Food Crisis and THE American Diet."

The title of the symposium proposes to link the habits of food production and consumption in the United States, the most industrialized nation, to the patterns of undernourishment observed in much of the non-industrialized world. At 7:30 P.M. on Thursday, April 8 in the FSU Student Center Dr. Cary Fowler will speak on "Steak for Millions versus rice for Billions". Dr. Fowler is from the Institute for Food and Development policy at Hastings - on - Hudson, New York.

Friday afternoon at 1:30 at the Student Center (April 9), the agricultural view will be featured. Dr. Charles Pugh of the North Carolina Department of Economics and Business will discuss the significance of non-edible cash crops on the economics of World Food production and Trade. Bruce Woodard, Cumberland County agricultural agent, will discuss grass-fed beef versus grain-fed beef.

In a second session Friday at 3:00 Dr. Fred Mangum will talk about environmental consideration of American agriculture, and Denny Shaffer of the Sierra Club will describe the new "Superfarms" in operation in North Carolina.

"Can Mass Starvation be Prevented by 200 A.D.?" is the theme of the Friday night session at 7:00 at the FSU Student Center. The socio-economic and political considerations of the topic will be discussed by Dr. Richard L.

Clinton from the Population Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Dr. Robert Patterson, Department of Crop Sciences from North Carolina State University, will talk about the technical considerations and Miss Sharon Lynn from the Environmental Fund, Washington, D.C., will discuss the moral consideration of preventing mass starvation.

In conjunction with this is an essay contest and a display contest for area students.

The symposium is sponsored by grants from the Department of Health Education and Welfare and the Florence Rogers Charitable Trust of Fayetteville.

MATH AWARD -- Ricky Wilkes received the highest score among Hoke High students in the 27th annual high school mathematics examination and ranked 32nd in the state [99th percentile]. Second place score was Joyce McKenzie and third place was Steve Wilburn.
