a kind of preventive medicine.
 "We also have to see that the collections are kept in the best possible condition so the paintings don't need restoring as often as they did in the past," Miss Leach said.
 Not all the paintings she works on are old and faded -- some, like the 1974 oil "Sunset Medusa," are new and damaged. "Sunset Medusa" arrived at the museum with a small white spot in the middle of a dark green area where a bit of paint had been chipped off.

 "I've finished making that part of the surface level with the paint surrounding it," Miss Leach said. "Now all I have to do is match the color."
 It took a year for the museum to get Cathy Leach here. A native of England, she was forced to wait for immigration papers to clear and quotas to open up so she could come to this country to work.
 She has a degree from the University of Bristol and postgraduate certificate in conservation from the Courtauld Institute of Art, University of London.
 She worked four years with the Area Museum Service for Southeast England, and has also worked at the Swiss Institute for Art Research in Zurich and the National Conservation Research Laboratory in Ottawa, Canada.
 She came to North Carolina, she says now, because "I just wanted to get to this side of the Atlantic -- and the North Carolina Museum of Art's collection is a fascinating one."
 According to Charles Robertson, associate director of the museum, "Miss Leach's arrival fills a long-standing need for in-house professional care of the museum's collections, which are continuously increasing not only in quantity but also in diversity."

specific incidents of damage by the supposed hurricane and certain immediate dangers to inhabitants and property of the coastal area. Players in the exercise will then decide what steps their departments or agencies should take to provide assistance. For example, a representative from the Department of Transportation might conclude that an area should be evacuated with the assistance of the Highway Patrol. His duty would be to exercise the Governor's decision to evacuate by issuing the appropriate orders. However, all exercise play pertaining to the response to any order will be simulated. The entire exercise will be contained within the confines of the Emergency Operating Center.
 In an afternoon session, players will coordinate in providing the enormous amount of information the Governor needs in requesting the President to declare the site of the hurricane a disaster area.
 In his proclamation, Gov. Holsinger said, "Civil preparedness is a program jointly shared by federal, state and local governments to assure the safety and well-being of citizens during emergency or disaster." He urged citizens "to do whatever is necessary to be prepared for any emergency or disaster as individuals, organizations, businesses and governments."
 At 1:30 P.M., local government officials and emergency personnel will gather at the National Guard Armory for a simulated coordinating effort.

Lester said specific details of how the projects would be done were not discussed, as every county bidding for funds was represented at the meeting and only general questions were discussed.

Lester said there was a possibility of administering the housing rehabilitation program on a "loan" basis at a very low interest rate and establishing a "permanent" type of fund when loans are repaid.

Lester said the alternative, to select houses for improvements, could be "problematical", but that HUD may provide guidance during workshops scheduled after the final award is made.

"Southern Pines had a similar program, we may check with them to see how it was worked out," he said.
