Insurance Agent Gets Sales Award

Avery Connell of the Integon Life Insurance Corp. was honored for his outstanding sales and service to customers at the company's education seminar last week. The seminar was held at St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands.

Connell was named to the President's Council.

Membership in the Integon honors clubs is based on exceptional performance and professional competence in selling Integon's various lines of insurance.

FINALISTS -- Eight finalists in Thursday's Miss EKOH competition were, left to right, Vicki Clark, Gay Ivy, Sally Campbell, Samantha Burke, Donna Scarboro, Phyllis Huffman, Linda Beaty and Delaine Peckham. HINT: Children's sleepwear from sizes 0-14 are required by law to be flame-retardant, but the flame retardant TRIS may pose a cancer hazard.

Many highly flammable fabrics have already been removed from the consumer's market. The Flammable Fabrics Act has made fiber and fabric manufacturers aware that nonflammable fibers and fabrics are a priority for textile researchers to develop.
Recently the consumer Product Safety Commission has received many consumer inquiries in recent days concerning the chemical TRIS which is used to make some children's sleepwear, sizes 0-14. The Environmental Defense Fund has asked that the chemical TRIS be banned because it may pose a cancer hazard.

Experts believe that washing new TRIS treated sleepwear several times prior to use, in accordance to the garment care label instructions, should reduce the amount of TRIS on the pajamas. Therefore, the Commission believes that those treated with TRIS already in use and having been washed several times present little, if any, risk to consumers.

The Commission offers the following guidelines for the identification of TRIS-treated garments:
1. The following fabrics used in the manufacture of children's sleepwear, sizes 0-14, frequently require the addition of TRIS to achieve flame resistivity: 100% polyester, acetate, triacetate.

2. Modacrylics and cordelan are naturally flame-resistant and therefore do not require the addition of a chemical such as TRIS.
3. Cotton and nylon require the addition of a chemical other than TRIS to achieve flame-resistivity.
To find out if a particular children's sleepwear garment has been directly treated with TRIS, consumers contact the manufacturers directly.

Spelling Competition

A statewide "Spelling Bee" is being held in many schools throughout North Carolina, with proceeds to benefit cerebral palsy victims.
The local school contests will be held in April. In May, ten regional finalists will participate in the state finals, to be held in Raleigh. Participating students become eligible for awards up to a $1,000 savings bond. Participating schools are eligible for prizes and awards of athletic equipment, school supplies, band instruments, etc.
This is the first year for the Spelling Bee and it will be an annual event to recognize and encourage scholastic achievement in the schools while supporting the services rendered by United Cerebral Palsy of North Carolina.
