West Hoke Holds Education Week

The American Education Week theme, "American Education and You: Partners In Our Children's Future," was definitely evident at West Hoke School during the observance of American Education Week.

American Education Week, sponsored by the National Education Association, observed the second week in November, is designed to inform the American public of the role that education is playing in our changing society.

This year's observance emphasized the importance of everyone working together to build bigger and better schools. Realizing this, the principal and faculty of West Hoke School extended invitations to school board members and government officials, as well as the parents, to which there was a great response.

Parents visited the school on Parent Visitation Day. In addition, the principal, faculty, staff and students were delighted to welcome county manager, James Martin; county commissioners, Danny DeVane, N.W. McPhatter and Mrs.

Mabel Riley; school board members, Mrs. Mina Townsend and Bobby Wright; and Mrs. Shirley Gibson of the Raeford Woman's Club.

To further demonstrate how education is a people-involvement affair, the faculty of West Hoke

School presented tokens of appreciation to the cafeteria workers and custodians of the school.

As a gesture of their appreciation, the principal and faculty of West Hoke School honored the education assistants with a reception during American Education Week.
