"Things That Matter"

by Lucien Coleman

What, exactly, do you wish people when you wish them a "Merry Christmas"? I've been giving that some thought lately, and I'd like to take this occasion to wish you some things that ought to contribute to your merriness.

My wish for you is:

That all the instructions for assembling kids' Christmas toys will be written by an American, rather than by an employee of the Japanese manufacturer who made them.

That the football games and kiddie Christmas television specials will be scheduled at different times, so you can preserve the domestic tranquility of your home during the holidays.

That you will be able to squeeze all that extra trash into the garbage cans, or that the dogs will stay away from the plastic bags with the turkey bones in them, until the pick-up men come around the week after Christmas.

That everybody under your roof will stay in good health for the rest of this year, so your holidays won't be spoiled by flu viruses and nasal congestion.

That all items of clothing received as gifts in your family will fit and be just the right color, so you won't have to drag yourself out to the store to exchange them while post-Christmas, pre-inventory, end-of-the-year clearance sales are going on.

That you will be calm enough to avoid family fusses while the in-laws are visiting you during the holiday season, since yelling and crying tend to make company nervous, even though they do it at home, too.

That the batteries in the toy cars, calculators, radios, trains, space-shuttles, electronic games, and flashlights will last at least until January 1.

That you will be so shocked at the Christmas bills, you will cut up your credit cards and start the new year off not paying those exorbitant monthly interest charges.

That you will be able to spend some time in a good old easy chair, resting up from those frantic shopping sprees, all that work in the kitchen, and the wrapping of mountains of packages.

That you will readily recuperate from the psychological and physical trauma of scraping up gifts for the kids' school teachers, which, of course, they forgot to tell you about until midnight before their last day of classes.

That you will be able to forget, for a few hours at least, the more painful things in life, and experience moments of unhampered happiness and sweet, quiet relaxation.

That the presence of the Prince of Peace will be real to you.
