THERE IS NO EXCUSE FOR NOT TESTING SOILS
Farmers today need to utilize everything available to them to maintain that competitive edge in crop production. As fertilizer costs continue to increase they should evaluate their fertilization schemes very carefully. This includes sampling the soils of each field annually to determine needed adjustments and actual elemental needs for efficient and optimum crop production.
Soil testing in North Carolina is free to all residents. Several states which provide soil testing assess charges for this service. Other states do not even have soil testing available. An article in the November 28, 1981 issue of The Produce News announced that the Washington State University Soil Testing Laboratory was closing. The elimination of this 30 year old service was necessitated by recent state budget crises. Those desiring soil testing in Washington in the future must rely on commercial soil testing firms or the University of Idaho's Soil Testing Laboratories.
There is no excuse for not testing soils in North Carolina. Any of you (farmers, gardeners, persons maintaining home lawns) who are not taking full advantage of this free service are probably not using your fertilizer dollars as effectively as you could. In other words you may be wasting money unnecessarily.

SIGNING A CONTRACT
Whether you sign a contract for a house or a set of encyclopedias, remember that piece of paper is a legal document. Under certain circumstances, you can cancel. But in most cases, you're bound by the provision of the contract. So you should ask some questions before signing your name on the dotted line.
Do you understand everything the contract says? Do you agree with everything the contract says? Is every blank in the contract filled in with information? Did you read the fine print?
If you answered "No" to any of these questions, do not sign. Get some help from a lawyer, the state attorney general's office or your local extension office.
Remember, signing a contract is serious business.
