The Upper Room

A little girl was reciting the Lord's Prayer. She got as far as "Forgive us our sins," stopped, and vehemently said, "No, no, no," because she had lost her place. When I pray, "... those who have sinned against me" something in me says, "No, no, no," but for a different reason. Sin is that which violates my relationship to God. To be sure, when I harm another the action is a sin. Because of that sin a person may be hurt, even destroyed, but I do not sin against another mortal; I sin against God. It is much more comfortable to me to pray, "Forgive us our sins as we forgive those whose sins have harmed us." Wrong is wrong, first and above all else, because it breaches my relationship to my Creator. It is possible to rationalize aggression against another human being, but we cannot justify that alongside God's standard of love. This raises questions about war and about the failure to feed a starving child, to provide medicine for a disease-ridden body, even to send those bearing good tidings to those who have not heard.

Den 3 won the Attendance Award. Here are some of the members with the adult leader.
